ARTISTIC ARP

Busy Making His Home Beautiful.

HIS FONDNESS FOR COOL LEMONADE,

And Praise for His Endeavors to Please—He Has Been Reading a Pamphlet and Comments Thereon, Etc.

It is most astonishing how much we live and do for other people—how much regard we have for other people's praise and opinions. We all do a sight of work to please those who are no kin to us and no little for those we don't know. Here I've been working hard for a month fixing up the new home, and it is all from a combined pleasure of pleasing Mrs. Arp first and the children next and then the public who pass by and will say "Isn't that a lovely place!" Well, of course I have some taste for the beautiful and the æsthetic, but not enough to work so hard as I have been working. I was content and thought we were doing pretty well, but I got a hint that the verandas were almost obliged to be painted and remodeled, and so I surrendered and went at it and got encouragement all along. "Oh, it is so nice! Isent it perfectly lovely? What harmony of colors that red and white and green?"—and they fondled over me and rubbed my head and combed my back hair, and they make me lemonade when I come in tired. I can beat the Jews playing tired when I want sympathy and lemonade. I can look tired and walk up the steps tired. There is an art in that, and every husband and father ought to know it if he wants domestic favors. My folks have discovered now that I have a cough and I let them keep on discovering it. A cough is a good thing. It provokes sympathy and alarm mixed. I can cough just like a consumptive and have the tears running out of my eyes. After the verandas were fixed up and the floors painted a sweetgum color and the front blinds painted with a fresh, bright coat of green, it was hinted to me that our bedroom ought to be repapered, and that if I would buy the paper the girls would put it on, and the ceiling overhead ought to be painted just to cover up the fly specks, if for nothing else. So I surrendered to that, and when the ceiling was finished they told the painter to keep on with the doors and windows and mantel, so as not to waste the paint he had left, and so, of course, I admired their frugal minds, and then the papering was next in order, and they said I was not to be bothered, but I did have to fix up the scaffold and arrange the plank to paste on and move all the furniture to one side, and when they got through I had to move it all back again and keep moving it, from Dan to Beersheba, and then at last move the scaffolding and doors and clean up the room, and it is all just as nice and new, and they are all so happy, and the whole room didn't cost but a few dollars, and so I am happy too. And they have been talking about that old stable for two months—that great big old stable that is forty feet front was right in a front line with the dwelling, the mansion and the new verandas, and it was too big and too dilapidated, and so they got me to walk around in the rear and look at a place, and I walked and I looked, not that they wanted it moved right away, but some time when I was able. That's the idea—some time when I was able. That always gets me. No ambitious lord is willing for his lady to believe he is not able to do anything in season. It is his business to be able. He promised to be able when he married her. It was implied if not expressed that he would always be able to gratify her reasonable wishes, and it was certainly reasonable to want that old stable moved. So I have been a week at that and I believe now that I had rather build a new one than move an old one. But it is all done and the female women of my household are satisfied and they take all the visitors around to see the improvements, and I listen to the compliments on the sly and enjoy them. What is the next thing on the programme I don't know, but there is some whispering going on about the old fashioned stairs. I have built a dining room and a pantry and double doors to the parlor and our home is now comfortable, and if it is not happy it ought to be. I wish that every family in the land had as good a one. Now they say that where the stable was and the lot attached is the very place for a garden—a garden for flowers and small fruits, and so I have all that work in prospect and if there is any stopping place I don't know it. There never has been any. It took me two hours yesterday to fix the rollers on the washstand and the bureau and to plane off and sand paper the drawers so they would open and shut easily. I am a pretty good carpenter and they all know it, and when I hear them say with faith and pride that papa can fix it, I never back out, but go at it. There was a rat hole in the pantry and as fast as I stopped it up with mortar he gnawed it out again, but I fixed him at last. It won't do for the paternal ancestor to admit that he can't do such things, whether he graduated at a school of technology or not. Sometimes when I hint that we are getting old and it don't matter about fixing up, she says that old people are the very ones to fix up and have nice things so as to compensate for the loss of youth and hilarity. I have been reading a pamphlet about the world coming to an end in a few years, and I have tried to distract her attention from sublunary things, but she says she remembers the Millerites very well, and how they sold out their possessions up north and bought white robes—ascension robes, and built high towers and scaffolds to fly from, and had the day and the night all fixed, but the Savior didn't come after them and they didn't ascend at all.

Well, that was a wonderful excitement. It was in 1843, and there were over fifty thousand adherents who got ready to ascend. Miller had studied the prophecies of Daniel and St. John, until he was an enthusiast and believed all he said, but Miller was no theologian, no scholar, and sensible people paid no attention to him. Next came Cumming, the great Scotch preacher, who thought he had solved the prophecies, but he too was mistaken. And now comes Rev. Mr. Baxter, of the Church of England, who publishes the Christian Herald in London, and has three hundred thousand subscribers, and has 150 orthodox ministers to indorse his solution of the prophecy. His pamphlet is the most learned exposition of the prophecies I have ever seen, and it does look like he proves his theory. He declares that we are now in the Saturday night of the world's week, and that the year 1900 will close out our comedy of errors and a new play will begin. That great wars are near at hand, and England will take a back seat and will lose Ireland and the West Indies, and that what now constitutes 23 kingdoms will, in 1890, be merged into ten, with France in the lead and a Napoleon on the throne. He tells all about the great battle of Armogedden, and how the Christians are to suffer for three and a half years and then triumph, and how the Savior is to come in the year 1900 and reign for 1,000 years, and so forth and so on. It is certainly a remarkable book and written by one of the first scholars of the age.

"In no event," says he, "can this old earth progress much longer in a peaceful status, for it has but twenty-five thousand million of acres of land, and counting one acre for seven persons, the world will be full in 350 years." "Full!" Just think of the world being full and no more room. I asked old father Dobbins what made him keep on buying land, and he said: "Because the Creator is not making any more land, but keeps on making people. There are 2,000 million people now and if they double every thirty years there will be five hundred thousand million people within three hundred years. They will be as dense as people at a barbecue and about as hungry. Something has got to happen—either this multiplying has got to stop or war and pestilence has got to wake up and go to work lively or the world will get full and run over sure enough.

But still I reckon we had all better keep on working and fixing and pursue the even tenor of our way. I told Mrs. Arp that it seemed like great events were near at hand and we had better put oil in our lamps and have them ready, and she said yes, and told me the oil was out and that I had better send for sugar too. When I mentioned the great beast with ten horns that Daniel saw in his vision she said that reminded her to tell me that the peafowl had hatched and I had better take Carl and go after her and bring her home and keep her in a coop for a few days. Verily there is no rest for the wicked. BILL ARP.

THE EXPLOSION OF THE MAJOR.

By Wallace P. Reed.

For The Constitution.

The mysterious disappearance of Major Potter caused considerable talk at the time in army circles, but the facts have never been made public.

Major Potter was stationed at a small post on the coast of Oregon, and the absence of telegraphic and mail facilities is perhaps one reason why the unfortunate man's fate has remained unknown to all except a few of his brother officers.

The Major's special hobby was explosives. He was all the time experimenting with dynamite and other destructive compounds, and it was his firm belief that he was on the track of a discovery which was destined to revolutionize modern warfare.

As there was no little danger connected with the Major's experiments, the Colonel in command of the post persuaded him to occupy a cabin at some distance from the quarters of the other officers. Thus secluded the veteran mixed his deadly chemicals, and tested his inventions at all hours of the day and night. His friends had their doubts, but when the inventor turned up one morning with his mustache and eyebrows singed off, and on another occasion appeared at breakfast with only one ear, it was admitted even by the doubters that he was making progress.

"There is no telling what he will do next," said the Colonel one morning, when the roof of the Major's cabin was blown skyward with a thundering report.

Everybody agreed with the Colonel, and after that the Major was quietly watched by the entire command.

"Colonel, I've got it!" shouted the Major one afternoon, as his superior officer passed his door.

"Glad to hear it," briefly replied the commanding officer, as he started off in another direction.

"If you will come in—" began the Major.

"Thank you," was the prompt answer, "but I've promised to meet Captain Jones, and I haven't a moment to lose."

The Major rushed into his den and darted out again.

"Here it is," he said, exhibiting a little round pellet in the palm of his hand.

"Why, that—that looks like a pill," remarked the Colonel, edging off a little.

"No matter what it looks like," responded the Major; "I know what it is and what it will do. You wouldn't think, now, would you, that a little thing like this, at the slightest tap or jar, would blow up the entire camp?"

"Confound you," roared the Colonel. "No, I mean I beg your pardon, but I can't stop another second. I must go."

At a safe distance, the Colonel paused.

"I say, Major!" he yelled, "for the Lord's sake put up that blasted thing, and don't bother with it tonight."

"Oh, that's all right," answered the other briskly. "I am going to test it in the day time away from headquarters."

"That's a good fellow," laughed the Colonel. "Why not go a few miles up the river? You need a wide field for such experiments. Take all the time you want and find a suitable place."

"It's all right," growled the Major. "I am not going to do anything rash. Don't be uneasy."

The next morning, at an early hour, the Colonel was notified that Major Potter desired to see him at once.

"He is sitting down in front of his cabin," the man said, "and he appears to be sick."

When the Colonel, accompanied by several officers, reached the spot, they immediately jumped to the conclusion that their comrade was a very sick man.

The Major's face—usually ruddy and cheerful—was of a deathly pallor and woe-begone in the extreme.

"What is the matter, my dear fellow?" asked the Colonel kindly and with some anxiety in his voice.

"Lord help me, but I'm in a fix!" was the gloomy answer.

"But what is it, Major; are you ill?"

"I'm a dead man as sure as I live," groaned the Major dolefully. "You know that thing you called a pill?"

"Yes, yes," said the Colonel, hastily." Never mind about that. Tell me your symptoms?"

"The fact is," explained the sufferer, "I've swallowed it!"

"Are you crazy? How did it happen?" questioned the visitors.

"Well, you know I didn't do it intentionally," said the Major. "I was not feeling well in the night, and I got up in the dark and felt about on the table for my box of pills. I found the box and it had only one pill in it. This I swallowed and then I went back to bed. After awhile it occurred to me that the box ought to have been half full of pills. I struck a light and found that I had been fooling with the wrong box. The pill I swallowed was the explosive pellet I showed you yesterday, Colonel."

"But great Goddlemighty, man!" ejaculated the Colonel, "what will be the result? What are you going to do about it?"

"I give it up," replied the Major, mournfully. "I have been sitting here ever since I found out what I had done. You see, I have to move with great care. A jar, you know, might explode the thing. Then, I don't know what to do about eating. I'll have to take liquid food, I suppose. If I swallow any hard substance, and it comes in contact with the pellet, the jig will be up."

"Keep still a few hours, and you will be all right," suggested the post surgeon.

"I don't know," and the Major shook his head sadly. "The stuff is a mixture that no mortal man ever made before, and it is impossible to tell how it will affect me. I fear that I shall ——"

"What?" asked a young lieutenant breathlessly.

"Bust!" gasped the victim. "Bust is the only word that expresses it. If I don't go up in the air I'm liable to tear a hole in the ground at any moment. You see, I know the force stored away in that thing. All the powder packed away in our magazine is not equal to it."

A whispered conversation ensued among the officers.

"Have you taken any medicine?" inquired the post surgeon.

"Nothing except brandy and water, and I think I'll go in and take another dose."

After advising the Major to remain quiet, and promising to return in a short time, his friends left him. It was breakfast time, and they desired to discuss the case among themselves.

"I believe that there is something in it," was the Colonel's opinion. "He knows more about explosives than any man living, and I have no doubt that he has succeeded in inventing a very destructive affair. If he has swallowed it I think that he has just cause for his alarm."

The post surgeon said that he did not like to speak positively about such a peculiar case, but he did not mind saying that the situation was neither dangerous nor critical. With a little prudence, the patient would be able to be up and about as usual in a few hours, or by the next day at farthest.

"I think," volunteered Captain Jones, "that his mind is out of gear. That would explain the whole business."

"And I think," said a lieutenant, "that he is drunk."

These views, however, did not meet with much favor, and the kind-hearted warriors sat down to breakfast with thoughtful faces.

Just as there was a lull in the conversation there was a deafening, stunning crash, louder than the jarring roll of a dozen thunderclaps. The building shook and rocked. The dishes danced on the table, and the furniture clattered about the room.

"My God! the Major has exploded!"

As the Colonel said this his face was as white as a sheet.

A wild rush was made for the door, and once there the spectators saw the realization of their worst fears.

In the dense column of smoke, shooting up from the spot where the major's cabin had stood, could be seen countless fragments of the wreck whirling round and round in the air. Pretty soon they began to descend in a shower, covering the parade ground with pieces of shingles, plank and logs, while numerous particles spattered down into the river a hundred yards away.

When the bewildered party reached the scene of the disaster there was little satisfaction to be obtained. A smoking hole in the ground and the scattered debris of the cabin were all that could be seen.

There was no trace of the Major.

Had the daring inventor exploded?

The officers looked at each other with awe-struck countenances.

"No, I cannot think so," said the post surgeon, reading the question in the inquiring faces before him. "Spontaneous combustion is possible. Such cases have been recorded, but if the Major really exploded it is a phenomenal event without a precedent. The poor fellow took too much brandy and went to work with his chemicals after we left him. That is my theory."

"Do you regard it as impossible?" asked the Colonel.

"By no means, but it is highly improbable."

"Then," said the Colonel, firmly, "I believe that the Major exploded."

"And that is my opinion," chimed in several others.

Notwithstanding the most careful search, nothing belonging to the missing man, not even a button, could be found. The river had doubtless swallowed up everything.

The explosion of the Major did not figure in the next report made to the secretary of war by the commander of the little Oregon post.

At the very last moment the Colonel tore up his first report, and substituted a briefer document in which he stated that Major Potter had come to an untimely death while experimenting with explosives.

But the truth of history cannot be suppressed. What the war department failed to get will soon be known far and wide.

THEY USED HIM TENDERLY.

The Power a Whisper Had to Quiet the Anger of a Judge.

From the San Francisco Examiner.

While a battery case was in progress in Judge Hornblower's court yesterday afternoon, a loud snort floated out on the air and startled Clerk Kenny so that he dropped his pen from his hand and nearly dropped off his chair.

"What is it?" gasped his honor, fairly trembling with rage.

Bailiff Duncan woke suddenly from the reverie into which he had been thrown by the contemplation of a fly's progress over Attorney Englander's bald spot.

"Order!" he shouted, bringing his fist down on the judicial desk with a thump that made the windows rattle.

Everybody looked suspiciously at his neighbor. The judge glanced at everybody.

"Do you mean to say," asked Prosecuting Attorney Long of the witness, "do you mean to say that the defendant did not jam the complainant into the coal box, and then set fire to it?"

"Wh-r-r-r-r—phew!" went the snore again.

Duncan grabbed a ruler, and looked mad. The spectators snickered, and the clerk jabbed the mucilage brush into the ink bottle in his rage.

Judicial inquiry failed to elicit the source of the disturbance, and the reporters and several detectives were formed into a committee of investigation, with power to act, and the wheels of justice commenced revolving once more.

"What was the position of the defendant while this man was trying to knock his teeth out with a brick?" asked the learned counsel.

"He was lying on his back, with his head in a pan of dough," responded the witness, when once more the startling sound knocked the gravity of the court room galley west.

The court rose from his seat and swept the room with his eyes.

"Bring forth that man who is wearing a white hat!" thundered the judge.

Four policemen sprang forward and rushed the offender up to the bar of justice.

He was drunk, just simply drunk, and he had fallen asleep on the bench.

Judge Hornblower wiped his glasses preparatory to taking vengeance on the offender, who had to be supported to keep him from falling, so full was he.

Suddenly Kenny made a dive up the steps of the bench and whispered something into his honor's ear.

The judge hastily donned his glasses and took a good look at the drunk.

"Lead him into the street and let him go," said his honor, his rage vanishing as if by magic.

Everybody looked surprised, but the mystery cleared up when Clerk Kenny was heard telling a party of friends after court had adjourned of how a certain judge and a man in a white hat were seen coming home from the jubilee celebration in a hack during the wee sma' hours of the morning.

CUTICURA REMEDIES.

SKIN AND BLOOD

Diseases from Pimples to Scrofula Cured by Cuticura.

Hundreds of letters in our possession, copies of which may be had by return of mail, repeat this story:—I have been a terrible sufferer for years from Diseases of the Skin and Blood; have been obliged to shun public places by reason of my disfiguring humors; have had the best physicians; have spent hundreds of dollars, and got no relief until I used the CUTICURA REMEDIES, which have cured me, and left my skin and blood as pure as a child's.

COVERED WITH SALT RHEUM.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this country. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe CUTICURA would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, externally.
J. W. ADAMS, Newark, Ohio.

HEAD, FACE AND BODY RAW.

I commenced to use your CUTICURA REMEDIES last July. My head and face and some parts of my body were almost raw. My head was covered with scabs and sores, and my suffering was fearful. I had tried everything I had heard of in the East and West. My case was considered a very bad one. I have now not a particle of Skin Humor about me, and my case is considered wonderful.
Decatur, Mich. MRS. S. E. WHIPPLE.

A FEVER SORE CURED.

I must extend to you the thanks of one of my customers, who has been cured, by using the CUTICURA REMEDIES, of an old sore, caused by a long spell of sickness or fever eight years ago. He was so bad he was fearful he would have to have his leg amputated, but is happy to say he is now entirely well,—sound as a dollar. He requests me to use his name, which is H. H. CASON, merchant, of this place.
JOHN V. MINOR, Druggist,
Gainsboro, Tenn.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold everywhere. Price: CUTICURA, 50 cents; RESOLVENT, $1.00; SOAP, 25 cts. Prepared by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CO., Boston, Mass. Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

A FLOATING PALACE.

The Vanderbilts to Cruise Around the World.

CLEOPATRA'S SPLENDOR OUTDONE.

Mrs. William Vanderbilt's Benevolence—Scenes at the Races—How Poor Women Are Swindled by Advertisements.

NEW YORK, July 2.—About the time that this letter is being read the steam yacht Alva will get out of sight of land from the bay of New York. She is the biggest and costliest private vessel afloat, and she will carry William K. Vanderbilt and his family on a tour clear around the world. The extreme luxury of this yacht could hardly be made comprehensible by a column of description. She is fitted out with everything that the owner and his advisers could think of to render life aboard enjoyable. She is as capacious as the city residence of his family, as completely equipped with servitors, and in all devisable ways an abode of such magnificent extravagance as no monarch of a century ago dreamed of. The journey is to last a year or more, but will be broken by stops at principal cities. Nothing approaching this in the way of luxurious travel has before been achieved. Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is the beauty and dasher of all the Vanderbilts. Her social doings have ever had a vim and style undesired, or at least unattained, by any other lady among them. Her toilets, her equipages, her diversions have been always new and sometimes strange, while the others have seemed to strive for privacy, seclusion and quietude. To her is due the conception of this round-the-world splendor. The route of the Alva will be first to London, and next to Paris, with the east to follow. Dinners and balls will be given on board, and it is unlikely that Cleopatra in her barge created the stir that the Vanderbilts will make in the old world with the Alva.

Don't set Mrs. Willie Vanderbilt down for a creature too light-hearted to feel for less fortunate fellow-women. She does a great deal in charitable and helpful ways, and I happen to know that her last act of benevolence was to give $50 to a poor sewing woman who had been swindled. Not only that, but she referred the subject to a lawyer with instructions to use all the money and time necessary to prevent other women from being victimized. The sufferer in this case received a printed circular from the Aid Supply company, 43 Eliot street, Boston. It said that she could get plenty of easy, light needlework to do at home by sending a dollar as security for the materials, which would be forwarded by mail. She mailed the dollar, believing the glowing assurances that the Aid company was rich and benevolent. If the swindle had consisted of merely stealing the dollar it would not have been as bad as it was. Instead, she promptly received some pieces of stamped plush with the materials to embroider them. She went at it elatedly, and in three days had earned, according to the promise of the circular about four dollars. She returned the work, and never afterward could get a word from the rascals. Investigation has shown that thousands of women throughout the country have been fooled in the same manner, being led to contribute not only a dollar apiece, but the labor by means of which some scoundrelly dealer in fancy goods has obtained a stock without cost. Anything more ingeniously devilish can hardly be imagined, and Mrs. Willie Vanderbilt made up her mind to stop it.

It is a mistake to accuse women of indulging in all the follies of fashion that are provided for them. Inventive men devise things which, they imagine, will be eagerly accepted by women, but which for a fact never get into use at all. Of that order, no doubt, is the contrivance on exhibition in a certain New York shop for toilet goods. It consists of an India rubber neck and bust, and is exhibited adjusted to an oldish woman employe. It comes up close about the neck, and has a velvet ribbon that conceals the meeting, with ends of velvet depending in the rear to hide the opening where it is buttoned or stuck together. The ends of velvet are securely fastened so they will not flop, and, as the boys say, "give the whole snap away." It is painted in flesh color, and has every blue vein carefully mapped out on it, and the wearer, who was painfully thin, made up her figure head to match it as nearly as possible. But there was a ghastly composure about this mask for the torse that was unnatural. And how hot she must have been with that clinging rubber over her neck and shoulders! I studied her after I was told what she had on, and it nearly stifled me to contemplate her slowly frying in her own fat. It is safe to say that no sale of the apparatus will ever be made; but it serves to advertise the shop, because it sets the women to talking about it.

One of the most unique groups I ever saw was at the races. It consisted of five persons in a box at the foot of the grand stand, and now and then one or two others who stood on the turf in front. In the forward row was a young colored woman and two young Irish women. Back of them were a husband and wife of middle age, neither of them Irish or colored. All were intent upon the races and had come down to bet. A young Irishman was the messenger and head of the party. He remained on the turf in front, except when he went to the betting pavilion to learn about the odds or to place money. They were all quiet and unobtrusive, and for this reason probably escaped my notice until after the first race. Then a tall, powerfully built negro passed along the turf from the pavilion, and as he went before the box he looked up at the group, and in a tone which was at once politely familiar and business-like, said: "Well, did you make a good thing?" It was one of the Irish girls who replied: "Yes, five for one." And the colored woman added: "I got there too." Their tones indicated satisfaction, but it was of the kind in which enthusiasm was repressed; in which long experience had driven out excitement. It was as clear as the hot sunlight that they were regular attendants—that betting partook with them of a business character. They were typical New Yorkers in dress, but there was none of that flash that would lead to a suspicion of irregularity. The negro went his way, but during the afternoon frequently returned and engaged the girls in conversation. I never saw a blacker man anywhere. His grave face was lightened only by the red of his lips and the whites of his eyes, and when he smiled by a deep dimple in which the sunbeams played and lost themselves. He wore a narrow brimmed brown Derby on the side of his head, a dark green diagonal coat, mixed trousers, a white spotted vest, a large blue tie, and he carried an umbrella in his hand.

I have said that this party gambled as a matter of business. I should make one exception. One of the Irish girls in the front row shrunk back into her chair and never said a word during the entire afternoon. And nobody addressed a word to her. She watched the young man who did the placing of the money, and when the negro was present she watched him, and during a race she looked shyly at the flying racers. But she hardly moved from her chair and never smiled. Her companions were not so lucky on the next two races as they had been on the first. The horses were started opposite the grand stand, and when the starter dropped his flag and Mr. J. B. Haggin's "Firenzi" went off more than a length ahead of the rest, the party in the box joined vigorously in the hissing and groaning that went up in criticism of the manifest bad judgment of the official. They looked bitterly sour, for they had not backed Firenzi, and when that horse crossed the line a winner, they shut their teeth together and declared that they hadn't been given a chance for their money. Then they consulted their programmes and the young man went off to find how the odds were on the third race. There were eight starters and at least four favorites. When the young man returned all the racers were on the track taking their preliminary exercise. He reported that he could get a bet of fifteen to one against Belinda, one of August Belmont's horses. The betting was nearly even on the favorites. The party looked at the track.

"I think it had better be Belinda," said the white girl seriously.

"She's a good one," acquiesced the colored girl.

And the young man evidently had a tip on Belinda, for he also favored placing the money on her. Such was the result. When the start was made Belinda went off a good third, and there was much excitement in the party at the prospect of getting seventy-five dollars for every five they had wagered. But lack-a-day! before an eighth of a mile had been run, Belinda had dropped to within hailing distance of the rear. Then the excitement was turned to disappointment, and the young white girl exclaimed: "There's my Belinda, and she can't get through!" which mixture of feminine and horse talk meant that Belinda was doing well, but that the horses in front of her were in the way, and so prevented her from getting the lead. They lost, but consolation was ready in the fact that Belinda had done well, and had it not been that she did not have time to get around the competitors, she might have won. Then something occurred to the white girl. Hastily she leaned over the rail of the box and looked down at her feet. A shade of annoyance crossed her face, and she settled back and smoothed out her skirts and shook them down, after which she leaned carefully over again to see what the effect of her action had been. Not all the girls in the grandstand were so thoughtful.

I went into a theater where a detachment of the enormous ballet now performing in the outdoor spectacle on Staten Island were practicing. One of the younger Kiralfy's led them. They were training for grasshoppers, I believe. The agile Kiralfy would anathematize them, in German, French, Polish and Italian, and so his opinion was not lost on one of them. Then he would go to the second entrance, and come down the stage with as many legs in the air as if he had been a centipede. A windmill in a blizzard couldn't have more serial action. Up would rush the whole gang and try to reproduce that flying entrance. Then the eagle-eyed Kiralfy would select a particularly stiff and tall girl, and a fat girl who bounced, and put the pair through their paces. Then altogether, and the shouting and tramping, the tittering and whispering, in more languages than the hod carriers of Babel used! A carpenter with a voice like a resonant steam engine conversed with a painter in the flies. A violinist scraped at a signal from Kiralfy. In one wing two men fought a combat under the supervision of a third, who knocked a lager beer mug on the bottom of his chair: "Two down—thrust—up one," and the perspiring combatants clashed. A woman looked on, and never ceased her work. With one hand she held to the flat, as she squatted suddenly until she was a bow-legged dwarf three feet high, and then sprang back to her full height and flung her right leg into the air, until her pointed toe was even with her nose. She squatted, rose, and kicked her left leg in like manner; and this she did continuously for an hour, while a dozen more girls in short calico skirts did the same thing. But the elderly woman in the wing was the premiere danseuse limbering up for her pas—her "grand pas," they call it on the bill, though her grandpa perished in the battle of Bunker Hill.

The builders of apartment houses are certainly aware of the number of dudes with long purses who inhabit this island. There are a quantity of shammily built houses with pretty names, such as the Oleander, the Gladiola and the Esmeralda. These places are reared for transitory birds of passage, like the comic opera choristers or the ballet coryphees, for a dude is really not a fullfledged dude unless he has a latch key in his pocket that admits the lessee to a flat occupied by some stage fairy. She usually has stunning feet, big hands, bleached hair and an utter inability to capture the letter H on its own ground, along with an overpowering partiality for its presence in improper places. Little Tommy Littlewit, Jr., took a first floor of the Orieanna, and substituted wood carved mantels for the cheap marble, put in stained windows and an old English fireplace, and decorated the ceilings with winged cherubs and gilded stars. In this blissful retreat little Tommy passed weeks of delightful retirement with Natilie Race, a coryphee; but fast as our Tommy was, he found the Race was not always to the swift, and at the end of a few months Tommy was deserted, and he took his troubled heart to Newport to look after his yachting interest. But before he went he put his gorgeous flat in the hands of an agent, and for certain reasons, having used his middle name with his landlord, he called himself Thomas Weakand.

"I will find you a tenant in no time, Mr. Weakand," said the agent; "I have a host of applications for such premises."

Tommy left the city and was gone until June, when he accidentally met the real estate man.

"I've such a good tenant for you, Mr. Weakland," said he; "an elderly gentleman and his neice have taken the flat for the summer. I have his check for a quarter's rent in my pocket now."

The agent pulled out the document and the heart of Thomas Littlewit, Jr., bounded in his bosom to the edge of his collar as he saw the revered name of Thomas Littlewit, Sr., at the bottom. His own dad, his revered governor, was in the son's premises with a niece. There was a caucus in Madison avenue that night. The father upbraided the son for idiotic extravagance. Tommy brought counter charges, darkly hinted about his ma, and the tide was very high. However, the father having been very much such a youth as Tommy, knew how to manage him. There was a checkbook brought in to act as mediator. Confidence was restored. But Tommy was heard in his club yesterday to howl out as he read an advertisement:

"All the splendid furniture of the elegantly decorated flat in the Orieanna, lately occupied by Mlle. Fauxpas, will be sold at a sacrifice in consequence of the departure of the distinguished danseuse for Paris."

The old man is ahead of his son, but just wait. CLARA BELLE.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

A Glance Over the Literary Field.

ALL ABOUT THE MONTHLY MAGAZINES.

The South in Literature—Briefs About Books—A Tribute to Henry Ward Beecher—News and Notes.

BLACKWOOD for June opens with an article the very title of which is attractive, "The Old Salvon: The Literature of the Last Fifty Years." It is a review of the literature produced during Victoria's reign, and is written with something like the brilliancy and fervor that once characterized the articles appearing in Maga. The fictive literature in the present number comprises a serial story, "Joyce," and a short story entitled "Thomas." For southern—indeed, we say American—readers the article of greatest interest is "Marse Dab After the War: A Virginia Reminiscence." Here is a picture that seems to have been painted from the inside:

To attempt a Virginia sketch without at least a genealogical allusion would not merely be unpardonable, it would be impossible. It was an instinctive feeling that this had to come which, I think, prompted me to open this paper with the colonel's full baptismal name. For the English ear, neither the names of Dabney, of Carter or of Digges have any particular significance. Distinguished individuals may possibly have borne them, but the names themselves are by no means distinguished. In Virginia, however, it is otherwise; for they are all three written large upon the pages of her past. There are, no doubt, plenty of people in Virginia possessing one or other of these names who are no connection whatever to the old colonial families who have given to them their local lustre. The colonel, however, was a representative of the main stock of these three illustrious houses, respectively. For his mother was a Carter of Birley, and his grandmother had been a Dabney from the shores of the Rappahannoc, while as for the Diggesses, are they not written in the chronicles of Berkeley county from generation to generation?

Marse Dab himself, however, never appeared to take much stock in the genealogical advantages he enjoyed. In many respects indeed—more particularly in the superficialities of life—he by no means did credit to his courtly progenitors. It used to be a common matter of whisper in the more aristocratic circles of Berkeley county—among the ladies particularly—that "Cousin Dab was a mighty rough man for his raising." But then, as these fair critics would go on to relate, it was not so much to be wondered, seeing of what "very ordinary stock" his wife came. Now, as I have said, the Dabneys, the Carters and the Digges were among the very first families in the state. If all their members were not educated and polished men, they ought to have been. But the Thackers, from whose family the colonel took his wife, neither were, nor ever had been, people of education and polish. They were not, it must be understood, mere common farmers. They owned plenty of land, and before the war had acquired almost as many negroes as the Diggesses themselves. Nevertheless they were upon quite another social plane.

The Thackers, in short, belonged to that enormous class that came between the real gentry of the south and the poor non-slaveholding whites. Politically a part of the great compact of "slavocracy," numerically too its greater part, but socially, and for obvious reasons, inferior. Not a harshly defined inferiority, it is true; that would never have done among people whose somewhat precarious interests were identical, and who were all members of a dominant political caste, with most of the world against them. But the division was the unavoidable one between people with the traditions, habits and customs of gentlefolk, and those whose existence was quite devoid of such refinements—were, in short, solid, intelligent farmers, and nothing more. These things were managed very well. The Diggeses and the Thackers had been accustomed to interchange calls regularly every year. The phraseology of the most perfect equality had always been maintained when they met, but there the fiction ended. Human nature could do no more, as I am sure you would have said if you had paid a visit first to the old Digges homestead, and then gone on to the family mansion of the Thackers; and the Diggeses and the Thackers were only types, and very good ones, of what, to apply English terms, we may call the old gentry and the old yeomanry of the south.

So when the war was over—though old prejudices and social barriers were a good deal shaken—Marse Dab was looked upon as having rather let himself down when he married Amanda Thacker. Southern rural society, however, though by no means destroyed in that district, was greatly shattered. People were too poor and too busy, and too sore with the outside world, to be very ill-natured about such trifles. Still, social traditions that are founded upon common sense and natural forces cannot be destroyed in a moment. So, as I have already remarked, the ladies of Berkeley county used to say in after years, that it was not altogether to be wondered at "Cousin Dab had got so rough."

Marse Dab's social position is then, I think, sufficiently well depicted. I once heard him airily described, by a jocose Canadian who was staying in the neighborhood, as "a dilapidated blood." The colonel's friends rather resented the sobriquet; but when he heard it himself some time afterwards, he laughed so loud that you could have heard him all over the plantation, and so long that his wife got anxious about him, Uncle Ephraim, however, who was standing by at the time, reassuredly remarking, "That's 'zactly how Marse Dab uester laff befo' the wah."

When I first knew the colonel, soon after the close of the war, he might have been five-and-forty. He weighed sixteen stone, and "stood 6 feet 3 in his stockings." His lung-power was tremendous. The negroes on the place used to declare that "Marse Dab could go in two hollers to Shucksville." Now Shucksville was the county town, and as it was thirteen miles off, this remark must of course be regarded as an Ethiopian illustration of a purely allegorical nature.

Marse Dab's title of colonel, I may as well here remark, was a purely honorary one. A captain, however, he must certainly had been. A very different sort of a one, too, from Captain Topfodder, who kept the store at Digges's mills, and took his rank from a freight barge he had skillfully navigated for many years on the James river canal. That the colonel was in any sense a false pretender to military honors was the very reverse of truth. Indeed, it was his valor that may be said to have actually proved in this respect his stumbling block. If valor alone—and of course I allude to the civil war—could have regulated rank, my old friend should by rights have been a general of division at the very least. For it was always said—said, that is to say, in Berkeley county—that Dab Digges was the bravest soldier in the whole southern army. His valor, however, was of such a hopelessly reckless kind, and his contempt of discipline so profound, that even the command of a regiment would have been out of the question. So as a captain he started in the 20th Virginia cavalry; and a captain he remained till the second year of the war, when he was taken prisoner. Those of his brother officers who survived the struggle used to say it was extraordinary that Cousin Dab (for the regiment was raised in Berkeley, and most of the officers were his relations) succeeded in escaping death or captivity, or even a wound, so long. "There was no man in the war," they said, "that tried so hard to get killed as Cousin Dab, and that wrought such havoc in the ranks of the enemy; or," they sometimes added in the strictest confidence, "got his men so often into 'tight places.'"

I gathered that it was upon the whole considered by no means an irreparable calamity when Mar'se

Dab, the fire-eating captain, was harmlessly removed in the second year of the war. The climax came about in this wise. It was in one of the great battles of that year, I forget which, that the 20th Virginia cavalry were ordered to charge a regiment of Massachusetts infantry. It was a misty day, and it was not till the horsemen were within a couple of hundred yards of the enemy that an overwhelming body of cavalry was discovered to be drawn up in their rear. At any rate the retreat was sounded, and the 20th Virginia wheeled about. Not so, however, Marse Dab! That big voice which the negroes declared would go in two holloas to Shucksville, was heard sounding through the fog and smoke that its owner would be d——d if he'd retreat. And that was the last that was seen of Marse Dab for two years.

From evidence that filtered out afterwards it appeared that the yankee infantry were amazed upon that day to receive the charge of a solitary horseman, who came down upon them out of the fog, from whence they never rightly knew. They supposed it to be a runaway horse till it got so close they could see that the rider was spurring for all he was worth and shouting like a madman, as they then took him to be. Not a rifle was raised, but when Marse Dab arrived among the enemy's ranks, so far from appreciating the forbearance, he laid about him with such zest that, if his sword had had an edge on it, several people would have been badly hurt. As it was, he was knockok off his horse with the butt end of a musket, and sent to the federal prison on Lake Erie.

Here Marse Dab chafed for nearly two years, picking up various and useful accomplishments, hardly worthy, perhaps, of a Digges. Among these he learnt how to bake bread, to cut hair and to pull teeth—studies forced upon him partly by the ennui of his position, and partly by the necessities for making a little money out of his fellow-prisoners, with which to procure those cakes of chewing tobacco which were the solace of his life. Again and again, in the piping times of peace, has Marse Dab joked to me of these accomplishments. Two of them, at any rate, he carried with him into private life, and practiced, in a friendly way, of course, during his few spare moments, with an enthusiasm that I am afraid somewhat victimized his neighbors. As for hair cutting, it was at least a harmless, if a somewhat singular, hobby. The colonel was, indeed, in great request in the neighborhood as a trimmer of locks. As a puller of teeth, Marse Dab's popularity was nothing like so great. He used an old-fashioned key, and for the rest trusted only to his herculean strength; so the hesitating attitude of the neighborhood towards him on the tooth question may be partially understood. There were some people of an economical turn of mind who were tempted to call in once the gratuitous services of the colonel. But I never heard that the most desperate sufferer from toothache or the most penurious individual ever repeated the experiment. Living near, as I did, I have heard sounds occasionally proceeding from Clover Hill that the negroes declared was Marse Dab at work upon some confiding countryman's jaw.

I was only once, however, a witness to one of these dental operations. If, as the negroes said, Marse Dab "could go to Shucksville in two hollers," I am prepared to swear his patient upon that occasion would have reached the local metropolis in one.

When I first knew the Colonel he had just come to live at Clover Hill. This was not actually at the close of the war, but it was at thee close of that three or four years of chaos—political, social, and financial—which ensued in war-worn Virginia after the surrender of Lee and the abolition of slavery; the period which marked the first conflict of new conditions with old ideas—that reluctant struggle of an old civilization, based on a kindly picturesque domestic slavery, to adapt itself to an altered state of affairs; a change from the obligation for food, clothing, lodging, and protection, to a business compact between master and servant, terminable at any moment.

Clover Hill was an average Virginia homestead of the better class. It had no pretension, of course, to "Newtown," the old Digges place at the other end of the county where the colonel's eldest brother still lived at that time. There, indeed, at Newtown were bric-a-brac, and old sideboards, and antediluvian bedsteads, and a good deal of old silver and family portraits that, whatever their defects may have been as works of art, represented at any rate ladies and gentlemen. Newtown was quite a famous place in Virginia; but Clover Hill was nothing of the kind. For that reason, perhaps, it was all the more typical. The place, till the colonel took possession, had been occupied only by a better-class overseer. Seed wheat had been stored in the parlor. The best bedchamber had been for years devoted to the storage of dried apples and washed wool, and the walls were coated thick with entomological specimens that had danced in the sunny rays of a half-score of departed summers.

With the Digges advent this was of course all changed. But the house was furnished distinctly upon Thacker and not upon Digges lines. As Amanda Digges was an only daughter of old man Hiram Thacker, she had inherited his household goods. Among these, too, there were family portraits of a kind—portraits of individuals, however, that sugested the sign painter's art in execution and the cattle show in design. Admirable men and women, no doubt, these two generations of Thackers that blew about in gilt frames upon the walls. There were few men in middle Virginia that knew the exact value of a negro so well as Hiram Thacker. There were none whose "shipping" tobacco brought higher prices in Shucksville, than that of his brother Moses. But the portraits, however faithful to nature, were not of a kind to give an aristocratic tone to the family picture gallery.

The house at Clover Hill, though not so venerable nor so large nor so hallowed by tradition as Newtown, had still been built as distinctly a gentleman's residence in the early part of the century. The colonel's great-uncle, Randolph Digges, somewhat prominent in his day as a whig politician, had been its founder and its occupant for a great number of years. The installment of Amanda Thacker and her family household goods at Clover Hill was an improvement on the overseer interregnum. Still it did very little, I am afraid, to restore to Clover Hill the aristocratic tone that was said by old people to have marked it when that venerable patriarch "Uncle Ran" used to make its walls echo to post-prandial denunciations of Jefferson, infidels, and Frenchmen.

The house was of red brick; it was two stories high and perfectly square. A wide corridor ran straight through it below, and another with the same direct simplicity pierced it above. Upon the ground floor there were three rooms upon each side of the corridor, all exactly the same size and exactly alike. Upon the upper floor, too, there were three rooms upon each side of the corridor, also all of the same size and exactly alike.

It had never been rightly decided which was the back and which the front of the Clover Hill house, for at either end of the corridor there were big porticoes, supported by the same number of high, white fluted columns, and approached by the same number of half decayed wooded steps. The up-stair corridor led through doors on to the roofs of these porticoes, from whence, under the overarching leaves of aged oaks, could be seen glorious views of woodlands, fields and distant mountains. It was a pity that these imposing props and qualifiers of the otherwise astonishing rectangularity of the house should have had their classic beauty marred by their application to domestic uses. In Uncle Ran's time, you may be sure, no such things would have happened; but in the utilitarianism of Thacker tradition it was no uncommon thing, after washing-day, to see the family linen hanging in graceful festoons over the carved railings, and fluttering in the wanton wind.

The doors and the windows of the Clover Hill mansion may possibly one day have fitted tolerably, though even in an old Virginia house of the most approved kind such a condition would have been hardly orthodox. Now, however, they had sprung at their lintels, and gaped at their hinges to such an extent that Mar'se Dab used to swear that the house was not merely not weather-proof, "but it warn't hardly dog-proof."

As for the winter wind! The hurricane that blew down these corridors had one advantage, at any rate for there was nothing about them of the nature or character of a draught. They were real honest broad-volumed gales, which bled not only down the corridors, but under the closed doors and out of the rattling windows with a force that made the Thacker portraits flap against the whitewashed walls till you trembled for the safety of those great works of art. Half a wagon-load of oak-logs might blaze in the huge draughty chimney, but six feet away from the blaze you were practically out of doors, and had to act accordingly.

From the early spring to the late fall of the year, however, there were few more charming spots in all Virginia than Clover Hill. Marse Dab could then boast with justice that "ther was 'ar stirrin' thar" (for he had dropped hopelessly, I am sorry to say, into the vernacular), "when the heat elsewhere was enough to kill a mule."

To nature's charms, however, I fear Marse Dab was almost insensible. He was not devoid of sentiment of a kind. Indeed it was partly that, I think, that made him so reactionary. But it was a sentiment that hugged insensibly all time-honored Virginia rural customs—a sentiment that made him cling obstinately to old-fashioned ways, to be happy among big gangs of negroes, to love the very sight of a tobacco field, to put up almost cheerfully with roads bottomless for mud, with gates that would not swing, with barns through which the rain-storms soaked, with houses though which the winter winds blew.

When the colonel took up his abode at Clover Hill, the land was in very fair condition. The overseer, who had had it in charge so long for the Digges family, had been a skillful and thrifty farmer. Being too old to be drafted for the army, he had remained at home all through the war. The estate had never been too heavily stocked with negroes, and had been seeded largely to grass and clover, the very acme of high farming in the south of those days.

When slavery and capital together were swept away by the war, and conditions of southern life practically revolutionized, most sensible men recognized that a different system of farming must be pursued. Numbers of the upper class flinched from the prospect, and went into business. Others set to work with good resolutions, and kept them. Many, again, made the resolutions, but did not keep them. Marse Dab, however, when he came to Clover Hill after the war, not only showed no inclination whatever towards agricultural reform, but he did not even make any profession of such intentions. He did even more than this. He openly and emphatically repudiated any such course, and declared that the style of farming that had been good enough for his fathers was good enough for him. He was too old, he said, to start raising clover and grass, when he'd been all his life trying to kill it in the corn rows. So Marse Dab "went into terbaccer." He collected double as many free negroes on the place, both renters and hired hands, as there had been slaves before the war, and commenced that enlightened course which finally reduced Clover Hill from tolerable fertility to absolute barrenness.

Marse Dab, moreover, was more fortunate than many of his neighbors; for when he married, he got with his wife five thousand dollars of hard money, which, in old man Thacker's thrifty hands, had somehow or other survived the general wreck of war.

Clover Hill was a picturesque property, undulating enough to give happy variety to the landscape, without too great abruptness for cultivation. The prevailing color of the soil was red, which gives such a warm look to fallowed hillsides when constrasted with the green of woodlands and growing crops. Of meadow-land there was plenty in former days—snug flats of rich alluvial soils between the hills, whose fertility was sufficient to resist, without deterioration, the average treatment of the old Virginia "rip and tear" system, which was saying much. In the overseer's time, and probably in the time, too, of old Uncle Ran, waving timothy grass and rank clover had flourished there and glistened in the heavy dews of the bright June mornings. When I first knew the place the backs of the negroes in hay time used to bend low and the perspiration pour from their ebony faces as they swished their mowing-blades through the heavy growth. Little tinkling streams, all overgrown with alders and grape vines, coursed their way down the valleys; and very troublesome they grew in flood times if treated, as Marse Dab used to treat them, with contemptuous neglect.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens with a long and ambitious piece of verse entitled "My Country." It covers more than eight pages of the magazine. Its form is that of an ode, and though it has been highly praised by northern critics who are supposed to possess taste and judgement, it seems to us to be strained, stilted and artificial from beginning to end.

The fiction of the number comprises the two serials "Paul Patoff" and "The Second Son," a short story "Dona Quixote," by Abby Sage Richardson. Miss Haygood writes of "Count Tolstoi and the Public Censor," and Agnes Repplier has a somewhat insipid essay on "The Decay of Sentiment." The poetry of the number is easily led by Mr. Bunner's "Thumann's Kinder Scenen." Dr. Holmes's account of his European trip grows perceptibly duller—or, it may be, we are expecting too much from this charming writer at his time of life.

Patty B. Semple, whose name is new to us, gives a series of delightful pictures of "An Old Kentucky Home," from which we take the following:

Already that summer of the wedding there was a cloud in the sky, of which we were dimly aware from hearing bits of somewhat animated talk concerning "southern rights" and the probability and consequences of Lincoln's election. During the following summer, that of 1861, the family gatherings were marred by violent debates and bitter words; for the members represented all parties then existing in the state—the thorough union man, the advocate of strict neutrality, the "southern sympathizer and the fiery youth who was chafing under restraint and eager to be off beyond the lines."

The women, of course, had most to say, and said it most uncompromisingly. One day in August, after the state elections, we children slipped away from dinner—which was prolonged beyond our patience by the violent political discussions—and took refuge under our favorite walnut-tree, whose ample, catholic branches sheltered us all alike, no matter how much our parents differed. That day marked the beginning of a breach which was long in healing: two brothers separated without a word of farewell, and for years did not cross each other's threshold. That night there were high words in the old house between father and son; they parted angrily; the latter went into his room with flushed face and resolute lips, and when they met next morning he was in traveling suit, and his saddlebags were packed for a journey. The young man ate his breakfast in grave silence, looking now and then at the tear-stained face of his wife, and speaking to her with more than usual gentleness. After a leave-taking that all tried to make like an ordinary one, he went to the stile to mount his horse, but there at the hitching-post, arching her beautiful neck, was Nelly Gray, the pride of the place, a magnificent iron-gray mare, which he had broken and ridden, but never called his own. He looked inquiringly at his father; the stern old face melted, their hands joined silently but closely, and the next moment the mare and her new master were moving toward the big gate. Before long everybody knew that he had gone to Humphrey Marshall's camp in Owen county. Poor Nelly Gray was shot under him in the first battle.

During the war the house harbored parties from both sides. It was searched more than once, and not in the most considerate fashion, by the union soldiers, for suspected persons. No one was ever found, although, during Bragg's campaign and Morgan's raids, the old homestead welcomed and ministered to many a poor fellow, who rode away blessing its hospitable owners. Sometimes about dusk a group of horsemen would be seen coming down the hill beneath the drooping branches of the beech trees; but before morning they were far away again. Often, as the doctor and his wife sat at night by the wood fire, they would hear a long, low whistle, answer the signal cautiously from the open door, and a figure would emerge from the darkness, the son on a visit to his young wife, or perhaps one of his comrades with a letter. Once they were roused at midnight by a troop, under orders of the provost marshal to look for arms and their bearers, only a few hours after a rebel soldier had left them to make his cautious way beyond the lines; and during another search a wounded man, who had been in the house for weeks, was hidden in the slanting recess of the attic, in the ghastly company of those very bones which were the terror of our childish dreams.

After the war the old place was never the same. Some of the negroes, with the feeling common to all of them that they could never be quite free so long as they stayed with their former owners, went away, not openly, but secretly, and as it seemed, ungratefully. Others who remained were not perfectly obedient, and the doctor, though never a harsh master, had been too long an absolute one to brook the slightest check. At the beginning of the war he was a firm advocate of the union and of the neutral policy first attempted by the state; its end found his opinions and sympathy entirely on the side of the south. The emancipation was to him "legalized robbery;" he had no respect for "a government that would forcibly take property without compensation" and thenceforward he never cast a vote. He was never "reconstructed;" he could not adjust himself in his old age to the new order of things, and he became a bitter, disappointed man.

The farm passed into other hands; and those who knew it in youth think of it now as desolate and deserted, though it may be that the outward change is less than we imagine, and it is only the free, joyous spirit of a former time that has gone from this representative old Kentucky home.

Briefs About Books.

FRANKINCENSE, by Mrs. M. Jennie Porter, published by G. W. Dillingham, New York. S. P. Richards & Son, Atlanta. This is a summer story from the pen of a writer who was formerly a resident of Atlanta. Mrs. Porter's pen has lost none of the facile skill displayed in her first book, "Valkyria."

OBITER DICTA, by Augustine Birrell, published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. S. P. Richards & Son, Atlanta. These brief essays on books and authors will be read with delight by all who were fortunate enough to get hold of the first series of the "Obiter Dicta" papers.

IN OLE VIRGINIA, by Thomas Nelson Page, published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York; S. P. Richards & Son, Atlanta. Among the rising young authors of the south Mr. Page already occupies a proud position. The readers of "Marse Chan," "Unc Edinburg's Drowndin'," "Meh Lady," "Ole Stracted," "No Haid Pawn and Polly," will be pleased to see them collected together in this elegant little volume.

THE STORY OF A NEW YORK HOUSE, by H. C. Bunner, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. S. P. Richards & Son, Atlanta. Here we have a charming story of old-fashioned New York life. Mr. Bunner shows that it is possible to combine elegance with strength, a happy art which appears to be beyond the reach of the modern school of writers.

A MYSTERY OF BAR HARBOR, by Alsop Leffingwell, published by G. W. Dillingham, New York. The critics unite in pronouncing this one of the most charming society novels of the season. Mr. Leffingwell has long been famous as a brilliant correspondent, and it will be his own fault if he does not win a high place among the bright story writers of the day.

A GAME OF CHANCE, by Anne Sheldon Coombs, published by D. Appleton & Co., New York, is a light and graceful summer novel.

CHINA AND JAPAN, by J. H. Wilson, published by D Appleton & Co., New York, is an entertaining narrative of travel. The average reader will find in it as much as he desires to know concerning China and Japan.

A DATELESS BARGAIN, by C. L. Pirkis, published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. A lively story pleasantly told.

A PENNILESS ORPHAN, published by George Munro, New York. This is a translation by W. Heimburg from the German of E. Benedict. It will interest all lovers of good fiction.

SAMANTHA AT SARATOGA, by Josiah Allen's Wife. Sold by subscription by L. A Clarkson|& Co., Atlanta. It goes without saying that this will be one of the most successful books of the season. Josiah Allen's Wife never wrote anything more deliciously funny than her narrative of the adventures and experiences of "Samantha at Saratoga." There is not a dull page in the book. As it will be sold by subscription the agents who have it in charge will make a good thing of it.

IVAN ILYTCH AND OTHER STORIES, by Count Tolstoi, published by Thos. Y. Crowell & Co., New York. Count Tolstoi is pronounced by Mr. W. D. Howells the greatest living novelist. He is certainly a master of realism, and his stories of Russian life reveal to us a new world. "Ivan Ilytch" has color, action and soul.

THE CRUSADE OF THE EXCELSIOR, by Bret Harte, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. For sale by Wilson & Bruckner, Atlanta. Bret Harte is losing none of his original freshness and power. In this delightful romance of the Pacific coast he is as dramatic and realistic as ever. The story holds the reader's attention from the first chapter to the last. It will rank among the author's best efforts.

News and Notes.

Will Carleton is said to be hard at work on a new volume of verse.

The Messrs. Macmillan announce for immediate publication Sir John Lubbock's new book, "The Gift of Life."

Robert Louis Stevenson has completed a memoir of the late Professor Fleming Jenkins, which will be published before the end of the summer.

The Century company paid Messrs. Hay and Nicolay $50,000 for the right to publish their Life of Lincoln in the Magazine.

Under the title of "Allan Quartermain," Mr. Rider Haggard has written a sequel to "King Solomon's Mines," which will appear some time next month.

According to Mr. Labouchere, the text of the last volume of Kinglake's "History of the Crimean War" is completed, and the book will appear in October.

A work on Oliver Cromwell, chiefly from a military point of view, is in course of publication at Berlin and is expected to be completed by the fall. Its author is Herr Fritz Hoenig.

The July number in the new series of "Great Writers" will be a life of Charlotte Bronte, contributed by Mr. Augustine Birrell, author of "Obiter Dicta."

Miss Mary Clayton Black, a daughter of the late Judge Jeremiah Black, will soon publish a biography of her father. As she had all his papers, it ought to be an interesting book.

Mr. John James Platt's new volume or poems, already announced, is, in all probability, the first book of verse by an American author which has made its first appearance in Ireland.

In Weimar recently was announced the discovery of a manuscript containing some 20 scenes of Goethe's "Faust" in prose, which were copied in 1775 by a Faulein von Gochhausen. It is probable that this manuscript will be published at some rather early day.

It is said that Mr. Rider Haggard is "more anxious to be thought a great sportsman than a great writer of fiction." We see no reason why Mr. Haggard should feel any anxiety on this subject.

A forthcoming work on Samuel Rogers by P. W. Claydon, of which the first volume is already in press, is said to contain much unpublished correspondence of an interesting kind.

In reply to Professor Patton's paper in the Forum, entitled "Is Andover Romanizing?" Professor Newman Smythe will write in the next number of that magazine on the question, "Is Andover Humanizing?"

Mr. Appleton Morgan, the well known president of the New York Shakesperian society, will presently publish through Benjamin & Bell, a collection of nine essays embraced under the title of "Shakspeare in Fact and in Criticism."

During his present stay at Brighton, Mr. Herbert Spencer is working on his autobiography, although the state of his health does not permit him to give this work more than a short time each day. He is scarcely able to see any visitors save intimate friends. The least unusual excitement aggravates his symptoms, and especially his sleeplessness.

The July Century will contain an indorsement by General Sherman of the war papers which have long been a feature of that magazine. The same number will also contain a paper by General O. O. Howard on "The Struggle for Atlanta," and a future number an article by General Sherman on "The Grand Strategy of the War."

Benjamin & Bell are to publish from English advance sheets the fourth edition of Alexander Ireland's "Book Lovers' Enchiridon." It will contain some new matter in addition to the new matter in the third edition, which was not published in this country. The same firm also announces a volume of "Society Verse by American Writers," comprising some eighty selections from the work of Bunner, Aldrich, Helen Gray Cone and others, as well as some lines printed for the first time. This latter volume will come from the De Vinne Press.

In regard to Colvin's coming volume on "Keats," the Athenaeum hears that the work "has been written in considerable measure from manuscript materials, and will contain, in addition to a number of facts relating to the poet and to his family, the correction in one or two important points of the received accounts as to the order and date of composition of his poems." It adds, too, that the volume differs from its predecessors in the English Men of Letters Series in that it contains an appendix in which doubtful prints are discussed, and pieces justificatives printed in full.

Messrs. Scribner & Welford are soon to publish a translation by the Princess Christian of the "Memoirs of the Margravine of Baireuth," who was the eldest daughter of Frederick William I., of Prussia, the sister of the Frederick who was called Great, and who had the princely habit of writing about what went on in the court around her—the tittle-tattle of scandals, the whispers of intrigues, and the thousand and one nothings which appeared so important in the early years of the last century. We have a library of books of this sort, to which this will probably be an entertaining addition.

The first of the Byrnes-Hawthorne romances of crime is entitled "The Great Bank Robbery." It is the story of the burglary in the Manhattan bank. It opens vigorously and after a fashion which recalls French detective stories. It has this reference of Inspector Byrnes: "Between 10 and 11 o'clock a new figure arrived on the scene. This was a ta and well-built man of perhaps thirty-five years of age, with a face expressive of quiet but penetrating intelligence, and a bearing that denoted power, self-confidence and reserve. He was neatly and unobtrusively dressed, and looked like a prosperous man of business of the higher class."

Another literary secret is out. The little book called "Through the Gates of Gold," which was published anonymously by Roberts Bros. early in the year, and which attracted much attention by its mystical philosophy, the extraordinary beauty of its style and the unwonted daring of its thought, is published now in a new edition with the author's name on the title page. The name proves to be that of Miss Mabel Collins, already known as the owner of the initials "M. C.," which were signed to those two notable theosophical works, "Light on the Path," and the "Idyl of the White Lotos." Miss Collins is an English lady, engaged in journalistic work in London, and a daughter of the late Mortimer Collins, the novelist. She has previously written several novels popular in England, and also an admirable life of Madame Modjeska.

Young ladies who are "sharpening their pens" with a view to novel writing, says the Pall Mall Gazette, are likely to be "plunged in a deep veneer of sadness" (as one of their sisterhood lately put it) by the report of a case in the Westminster county court. It appears that Lady Constance Howard, daughter of the earl of Winchilsea, has written three novels—"Mated with a Clown," "Mollie Darling" and "Only a Village Maiden"—and, by her own confession, has made only £20 out of them, or something less than forty-five shillings a volume. The very titles, one would imagine, should be worth more than that. "Mated with a Clown" is good, and "Mollie Darling" is an inspiration Miss Broughton might envy. When a titled novelist with such attractively titled novels cannot earn as much as £7 for three volumes, what chance is there for the Misses Brown, Jones and Robinson?

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons have transplanted to this country a kind of binding and color of binding (supposing, indeed, that such things can be said to be transplanted,) which signalized the outward appearance of Max O'Rell's John Ball and his island, and which are now popularly known as the yellow covers. They have clad in these habiliments selections from among the most popular authors they have ever published, and have issued them in an inexpensive form; such authors, for example, as Mr. Frank R. Stockton, Mr. Robert Grant, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett and Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson. The average sale of each volume of the writings of these authors have exceeded ten thousand copies, Mr. Stockton proving so far the most popular, while of single books, Mrs. Burnett's "That Lass o' Lowrie's" has had the largest sale.

Of Dickens the man and Dickens the author the Spectator makes the following observation: "Those who have learned to love Dickens in his books will find much to disappoint them in his character and life. It is difficult to doubt that he was hard, domineering and selfish. His conduct to his wife, so far as the public is enabled to judge of it, was inexcusable. He was so little alive to natural sensibilities as to introduce his nearest relations to our notice under the humiliating presentments of Mr. Micawber, Mrs. Nickleby, Dora, Flora Finching, and Mr. F.'s Aunt. Sir Arthur Helps pronounced the amazing judgment that Dickens was a man of refinement; but this view is surely inconsistent with his acknowledged uneasiness in any society where his supremacy was not unquestioned. And he awowed a clinging sense of degradation in the remembrance of his earliest struggles, which was unworthy alike of his genius and his social creed. It is with unaffected relief that we turn our contemplation from his character to his writings."

Here is a literary anecdote which the husband of an admired piano player, well known in New York, recently sent to a friend:

Scene, Vienna—Time, the present—(Frau H. H. finds the Vienna library system a failure, and casually mentions the fact to her landlady, who is the proud possessor of a shelf full of books, and, as Theophrastus says, "occasionally occupies the same room with them.")

The first question: "Well, what would you like?" is naturally answered by another: "Well, what have you got?" Suddenly the landlady is illuminated by an idea.

"Boats is the thing!"

"Boats? Who is Boats?"

"Boats, the English novelist. Don't you know him?"

"No," (hesitatingly) "I believe not." (Painful pause in which "Boats's" own countrywoman feels that she must disown him and her own reputation as an intelligent being at the same time. But it can't be helped.)

"No; I really never heard of Boats."

"That's singular. I am very fond of Boats, the English—your—novelist. Boats—you must read him."

"Boats???"

"Yes, Boats; Bay—oh—tzet—Boats. He wrote 'Oleever Tweest,' and—"

"Oh!!"

A volume of "Contemporaneous Tributes to the Memory of Henry Ward Beecher," has been privately printed by E. W. Bok. It contains estimates and reminiscences of the late preacher written by more or less distinguished persons. Mr. Andrew Carnegie relates these anecdotes: "The desire of every visitor to our shores, whether philosopher, poet, historian, physician or statesman, to hear Mr. Beecher often led me to Plymouth church. Matthew Arnold was no exception to the rule. After service, Mr. Beecher came direct to us, and as I introduced him he extended both arms, grasped the apostle of sweetness and light, and said: 'I am very glad to see you, Mr. Arnold. I have read, I think, every word you have ever written, and much of it more than once, and always with profit.' Mr. Arnold returned Mr. Beecher's warmth—as who could ever fail to respond to it?—and said, 'I fear, then, you found some words about yourself which should not have been written!' 'Not at all, not at all!' was the prompt response, and another hearty shake of both hands, for he still grasped those of his critic. 'Those were the most profitable of all.' Upon another occasion I had gone with a well-known English divine to Plymouth church, and in the party was Miss Ingersoll, whom I introduced to Mr. Beecher, saying: 'This is the daughter of Colonel Ingersoll; she has just heard her first sermon, and been in a church for the first time.' As with Mr. Arnold, the arms were outstretched at once, and grasping hers, he said, as he peered into her fair face, 'Well, you are the most beautiful heathen I ever saw. How is your father? He and I have spoken from the same platform for a good cause, and wasn't it lucky for me I was on the same side with him! Remember me to him.'"

The announcement of the discovery of a poem by Edgar A. Poe, nearly a thousand lines long and hitherto unguessed, is one to excite interest of a lively kind; yet no less distinguished an origin is claimed for an obscure pamphlet published in Philadelphia in 1847, and now issued under the title "The Poets and Poetry of America, a Satire by 'Lavante,' reprinted," etc. (New York; Benjamin & Bell.) The finder of this literary waif prefaces it with a very able and thoroughly informed introduction, in which he seeks to show that Poe wrote the poem and left it unclaimed, and he makes out a strong case. It is not surprising that Poe should publish it anonymously as he did several of his poems, and his not acknowledging it after it had failed is quite consonant with his secretive and proud temperament. In 1847, he was, it has hitherto been supposed, idle, and this work fills up the gap in his activity; he had the money to pay for its cheap publication, derived from his libel suit in February; and it has been pointed out that he advertised, March 20, 1847, "The Authors of America, in Prose and Verse, by Edgar Allan Poe," as shortly to appear. This satire is believed to be the "Verse" portion of that work. The internal evidence is also strong. The hatred of Griswold, the contempt of Rufus Dawes, the jealousy of the northern poets and the partisan southern touch, the omission of all the "female poets," the theory of poetry expressed and the unbridled egotism and spleen personally exhibited—are leading traits that serve severally to point out Poe as the writer; and there are several minor notes of his style, not excepting redundancy and defects in the rhythm. There is certainly no overstatement in the conclusion advanced, "Either Poe wrote this satire, or somebody else, still unknown, wrote it with Poe's experience, Poe's doctrines, Poe's animus, and in Poe's language." The last thirty-five lines are as surely Poe's as mere internal evidence can make them, the very tone of his voice; but, so long as no direct authority can be adduced, the proof must be regarded as incomplete. Independently of its authorship, the satire is by a practiced and talented hand, but utterly without the touch of genius. It is, in fact, insignificant as literature, simply a well written bitter squib. In satiric verse, it would seem, Poe's hand was cramped, and he did not lay about him with the vigor and point he showed in the free field of his prose. If it be granted that this satire is the summary and crowning outcome of his long labors in exposing "puffery" and "quackery," the finished poetic version of his "prose Dunciad"—and we do not see how to deny it—it only affords wholesale justification for Henry James's remark about Poe's "very valueless verses." The contemporary history of the pamphlet could probably be recovered from newspaper files.

The Century Magazine, which is nothing if not exhaustive in topics of general and special information, will present in its July number a curious paper, the subject of which refers to what may be called instantaneous photography. Five years ago Mr. Edward Maybridge published by this process "The Horse in Motion," a series of illustrations of arrested movements, so to speak, which astonished the world and dismayed a good many artists, who had painted horses for years and always incorrectly. Working since that time in the same line, under the auspices of the university of Pennsylvania, which has not been niggardly in the disbursement of shekels, Mr. Maybridge has produced over 20,000 views of the position assumed by men, women and children, draped and undraped, and by birds and animals in motion, and it is upon a selection from these that the paper in the Century is based.

FRIENDS, NOT FOES.

The Blue and the Gray at Gettysburg.

A LOVE FEAST HELD BY THE VETERANS

Speeches of Welcome to the Ex-Confederates by Pennsylvanians—Hearty Responses by the Southerners.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., July 2.—About five hundred survivors of the Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second and One Hundred and Sixth regiments, composing the Philadelphia brigade, which bore so conspicuous a part in the third day's fight at Gettysburg, when confronted by Pickett's division of the confederate army, arrived here this afternoon. The welcome which they extended to the survivors of their old antagonists tonight was a warm one, and Pickett's men were received at the railroad station by Philadelphians and escorted from the depot to the Eagle hotel, where a stand-up lunch was given them. After which all made for the county courthouse, where the first camp fire of the Blue and the Gray upon the historic grounds of Gettysburg was held.

At 9 o'clock the meeting was called to order by John W. Frazier, who said:

Ladies, Comrades and Friends: The high honor of calling this meeting to order has been assigned to me. This is, as you all know, the first fraternal meeting of the blue and gray that has taken place on these historic grounds, and standing beside the last resting place of the honored dead, who here gave their last full measure of their devotion to the union, I say to you that these fraternal meetings of the blue and gray will do more to create and maintain sincere and lasting fellowship among the people of the whole nation than anything else that has taken place since the war for the preservation of the union ended; and I hope to see them, as I believe they will be, held all along the line from Gettysburg to Vicksburg. Knowing well the feelings that prompted the meeting, I can truly say that this fraternal meeting of the Philadelphia brigade and Pickett's division will, indeed, prove

'A union of hearts and a union of hands,
A union none can sever;
A union of homes and a union of lands,
And the flag of our union forever.'

I now have the pleasure of presenting Comrade W. S. Stockton, presiding officer of this meeting, with the statement that to him, more than any other, is due the credit of bringing it about.

Mr. Stockton, upon assuming the chair, said he thanked his comrades for the honor conferred upon him, and he would take occasion simply to remark that he believed what was done and said here upon this fraternal meeting of the blue and gray would mark a new and gratifying era in our country's history. As presiding officer it was his pleasant duty to present Colonel Charles H. Barnes, president of the Philadelphia Brigade association, who would extend a soldier's welcome to foes in war, but warm, devoted and lasting friends in peace. Colonel Barnes stepped forward and said:

Fellow Citizens and Members of Pickett's Division of the Army of Northern Virginia: An honorable and pleasing duty has been assigned to me by Philadelphia brigade of the second division, second corps, army of the Potomac. This veteran brigade of the union army, composed of the Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second and one hundred and Sixth regiments, Pennsylvania Volunteers, upon more than one occasion during the dark hours of the republic, encountered your people in active warfare, and it fell to our lot to meet in hostile array and deadly conflict in what may be truly called the crisis of the battle of Gettysburg, within sight of the masses of both armies on that memorable afternoon of July 3, 1863.

The most wonderful intellectual gift that beneficent Creator has bestowed upon man is the faculty of memory; the power to recall from the inner recesses of the brain, thoughts and scenes that for years have lain dormant, and which, in turn, recall others, as they pass rapidly before the mind bringing to the mental view most vividly the panorama and scenes of this historic field.

Colonel Barnes then gave, from memory, a vivid and eloquent description of the battle, describing the share of Pickett's division in it as one of devotion, sacrifice and courage unsurpassed in the history of our country. Said he:

No thoughtful man can at this date read the history of the war or recall its memories and fail to see the hand of Divine Providence developing through trial and discipline, that courage and tenacity for principle and patriotism which exalts and ennobles a people. We have dwelt for a few moments on the incidents of the battle for the reason that the place and associations compel reference, but to-day, soldiers of the contending armies, we meet as citizens of a united country. The old issues are dead, and new ones confront us. We who have fought as the blue and the grey can discuss the past, if need be, in the light of the present; as travelers who, after journeys and conflicts by the way, sit down on the mountain top and review the scenes through which they have passed and the dangers of the road over which they have journeyed.

We welcome you to this historic field and its memories with a true soldierly greeting. In the performance of this duty, we would fail to honorably acquit ourselves did we not announce to you that the movement of the Philadelphia brigade, in the tender of this reception, has the cordial and practical support of our citizens of all classes and pursuits of life. And now it remains for me to say to you, men of Pickett's division, the authority of this brigade association and its friends, that we desire that you will honor us during your stay at Gettysburg by becoming our guests. We welcome you because you were brave soldiers in war; we welcome you, because you are true citizens in peace, and may our stay here be one of pleasure to each of us, and of fraternal greeting that shall guide us to higher resolves for the perpetuity of the constitution and the union—to manly determination as citizens to meet conscientiously and in the fear of God, the questions and issues of the hour, and to such an abiding faith as the magnificent destiny of the republic as will lead each of us to trust that the Almighty Being who spoke from the cloud and pillar of fire to the leader of Israel, saying: "Speak to the children of Isreal that they go forward," and who today is calling us by His providence to higher and nobler achievements in the cause of humanity and the government of the people.

Upon behalf of Pickett's veterans, Captain C. P. Reeves, of Richmond, commander of Pickett's Division association responded as follows:

Friends and Comrades:—I desire for myself and comrades to tender you our heartfelt thanks for the kind, cordial and hearty welcome extended us on this, an occasion never to be forgotten by us, but cherished and remembered as the brightest spot in the checkered pathway of life. If in the remarks which I desire to make on a subject on which I have thought much and felt deeply, I should be led to say something which might better be left unsaid, attribute them to the warmth of my feelings on the subject; bear in mind that I am speaking in no representative capacity, but I am solely responsible for the sentiments I utter. Perhaps some of you have seen an article in the New York Herald on the subject of a union monument, to be erected on a spot selected by Hancock's and Pickett's divisions, which should be national in its character, not commemorative of any particular division of either army, but the memory of the dead of both armies—a monument of American valor and magnanimity—a monument which would stand as a pledge of perpetual union seeking to unite in doing honor to our dead; a pledge of perpetual reconciliation—a Mizpah stone, its shaft pointing upward, calling upon heaven to witness our reconciliation and renewed a covenant that neither of us would ever pass it to harm the other, and saying, in the language of Scripture: "The Lord watch between Thou and us."

Soon after the publication of the article referred to, a committee was sent on here to make suitable arrangements for the erection of a monument to Pickett's division on the battle field of Gettysburg. Failing in this, my comrades of Pickett's division have decided, and I think properly, to place the monument to our dead on Gettysburg hill, in our own beautiful Hollywood, where they may rest in peace till awakened by the sound of the last trumpet, to appear before Him who will give them a righteous judgment. Peace to their ashes. They gave their lives for a cause they deemed sacred, and mortal man can do no more. There, too, I hope to rest when life's duties are ended, in the bosom of my dear, native state, loved and honored since I have loved and honored anything; never more than now in her adversity. I am prouder of my heritage as a free born son of Virginia to have inherited a crown in any other land. Proud of her history, filled as it is with a record of heroic deeds; proud of her heroes, who illustrated American valor; proud of her statesmen, who have shaped the destanies of this mighty nation; proud of her orators, whose eloquence has thrilled the nation when patriotism or freedom was the theme; proud of her cause in the late struggle; proud of her efforts to preserve the peace and avert the awful calamities brought upon us by the war. An effort so persistent that those who knew her not said sneeringly that she could be kicked out of the union. Proud of her when, failing to secure honorable peace, fully counting the cost, she bared her bosom to the strife, deeming, if need be, all else well lost in the bright path of duty and honor; proud of her sons who rallied to her side, and for four years beat back the pitiless storm of war hurled upon her, exhibiting to the world examples of heroic fortitude worthy of the mother that gave them birth; proudest of all that when, worn out and exhausted by their victories, the shattered remnants were compelled to yield to overwhelming numbers and resources, they grounded their arms and turned themselves to the task of rebuilding the waste places and restoring their mother state to the proud position she had ever held in the front rank. Such are my sentiments, honestly entertained and freely expressed. And what shall I say for those, my comrades, endeared by the privations shared, the hardships endured and the dangers encountered? Scarcely is there a battlefield, from Bull Run to Appomattox, on which some one dear to me has not died, laid down their lives to their native state.

Dear comrades, honored as men, loved as companions, cold in death will my heart be ere I cease to love and honor you. Yet, my heart is large enough to embrace my whole country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the lakes to the gulf; to rejoice in her prosperity; to glory in her greatness; to feel a thrill of pride when her course is as glorious as her might is resistless; when her magnanimity equals her power.

And to you, gentlemen of Gettysburg, let me say this is an opportunity to display a magnanimity worthy of this great nation. Leave to time, the touchstone which tries all human action, the puestion of right and wrong involved. Let the future historian, probably yet unborn, try the cause, and posterity will render a verdict which is apt to be just. To them let us leave it. Its deeds have been done; its drama closed. But for our country there remains a future. We, too, are making history. If this occasion, being in the interest of peace and reconciliation, will fill a bright page in that history, with what lustre would that one shine which would record a similar reunion, national in its character, in which should be buried all rancor and hatred, from which we could go forth, not merely as citizens, but as friends and brothers, animated by one aim—the greatness and glory of our common country. Adopt in its true spirit, the union monument suggested and with a magnanimity broad enough to embrace our whole country; deep enough to bury in oblivion the bitterness and hate of the past strife, build on the spot suggested a monument to immortalize American valor and demonstrate American magnanimity. Let the whole country join with the national government, every state in union. Complete it, if possible, by the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle. Send out your invitations, and my word for it, Gettysburg will witness such a gathering as the whole world has seldom seen. Its hills and valleys, dotted with white tents, not filled with angry combatants ready to hurl each other to destruction, but with the highest type of American manhood, ready to join hands in true and hearty reconciliation, which shall make us again a united and happy people. Do this, and write the name of America higher on the roll of true fame than you could have done had you been able to write yourselves victorious on every battle-field of the war.

I cannot but believe that this suggestion will commend itself to good men everywhere in our broad land, and if properly carried out will do more to restore true friendship in the sections than any other one thing which could be done. Let us, my countrymen, embrace the opportunity, and make one page in American history which shall shine with a lustre unsurpassed by any recorded since the world began.

Upon the conclusion of Captain Reeves's speech, Colonel Banes introduced Colonel Alexander K. McClure, of Philadelphia, who had been chosen to extend a welcome from the citizens of Philadelphia particularly, and from the state of Pennsylvania generally, to the Virginians. Colonel McClure said:

After more than a fraternal greeting so eloquently expressed by representatives of the survivors of the Philadelphia brigade and of Pickett's division, it is an easy task to speak for the city of brotherly love and for the keystone state of the federal arch, in hearty sympathy with the peace and brotherhood which marks this notable reunion.

Twenty-four years ago your mutual heroism consecrated this ground to unfading immortality. The shock in which your respective commands met was the bloodiest of all the many sanguinary conflicts of our civil strife, and on its issue trembled the issue of the decisive battle of the war. It ranks with Thermopylæ in desperate courage, but the heroism of the warriors of Leonidas, whose execrable Spartan laws made defeat dishonorable regardless of position or numbers, pales before the volunteer soldiers of Hancock and Pickett, who dared and died for their convictions. It was a strange, sad conflict. Men of the same race; inheritors of the same heroic traditions; sovereigns in framing the same laws, met in deadly struggle to solve the great civil problems which had vexed our most enlightened and patriotic statesmanship for three-quarters of a century. The ignorant, inconsiderate and dishonest say that it was causeless, that it was precipitated by the babbling demagogues who ride in the tempest, but no such agents could have called millions of the most intelligent, peace-loving and generous people of the world to four years of fraternal war. There were agitators and demagogues who hastened the war, as there are agitators and demagogues who have hindered peace since the war ended; but there were irreconcilable theories left unsettled in the foundation of the government which ripened in intensity and enlarged in interest until a peaceful solution was no longer possible. A less heroic people could have avoided our civil war, but with each citizen a sovereign—the bravest and noblest of all the people of the earth—had only a choice between dismemberment of the union or its pillars cemented by the arbitrament of the sword. Never did opposing armies accept battle with sterner purpose. Every church of every belief in the north and south sent up fervent prayers to the same God for the triumph of their respective flags, and in like manner called for thanksgiving and praise when victory came to either. Every pulpit appealed to the patriotism of the people in the name of the Ruler of Nations to sustain the cause of its section as a holy duty, and from every battlefield came the heartfelt thanks from the victor of abiding faith in supplication from the vanquished; all from the same altar to the same Jehovah. Both could not triumph, and at Appomattox came the judgment of the final arbiter, that the national union shall be in indissoluble, and that national sovereignty shall be omnipotent within the limitations of its own fundamental law. And from Appomattox came a promise not only of peace but of brotherhood; it came to the north and south from the great Captain of conflicts. The hero and victor in war was no less a hero and victor in peace. Of the shattered legions of Lee not one left that historic field an enemy of General Grant. He did more than conquer an enemy. He counted as the greatest laurels of his victory the love of the confederate warrior and the respect of the south for the union, against which its sons had so valiantly battled. When presented to the nation as a candidate for the highest civil trust of the world, his battle cry that answered those who reveled in turbulance of hate was, "Let us have peace."

Among his earliest appointments when called to the presidency was a lieutenant of Lee, under whose eye the memorable charge of Pickett's division was made, and later in his administration a confederate soldier and statesman sat in the cabinet. Thus came peace and brotherhood under the inspiration of the victor of victors in our bloody civil strife, and his dying testament comes from Saratoga as a shaded mount, bequeathing fraternal love and national unity to the blue and gray. Well may the civilian welcome in hearty reunion now the silvered and furrowed survivors of the deadly conflict on Cemetery hill, when such lustrous teaching and example command it, and I greet you, in the name of the great north, now inseparably interwoven with the great south in sympathy, in interest and in fellowship. Our free government is stronger at home and mighties abroard today because of the wounds of the civil war, and our children and our children's children will turn to its sacrifices, its sorrows and its irrevocable judgments as the surest guarantee that a government of the people by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Colonel William R. Aylett, who succeeded General Armistead as commander of the brigade upon the death of General Armistead, having been chosen to respond on behalf of the state of Virginia to Pennsylvania's welcome, said:

Brothers and Sisters of the Keystone State; Comrades of Great Battlefields; My Countrymen, All: We are here today as friends and kindred of a common country, sent to you by the Old Dominion, as an expression of her love and confidence. When your invitation reached us it touched our hearts in a tender place, and the speech of welcome which has just been delivered so eloquently is worthy of the orator and the great state and city which he represents. Not only do we receive and shall ever treasure the noble sentiments of Colonel McClure as the voice of Pennsylvania and her chief city, but also of those brave men who met us here twenty-four years ago with a valor that we could not overcome, and who meet us here tonight with a loving welcome so dear to us and to our people. Not only do we cherish sentiments so nobly expressed, so warm and true from the hearts of our brethren of the north, but remembering the avocation and profession of the gifted speaker, we hear in loud tones the voice of the great American press—that power mightier than armies or navies; mightier than the swords and sceptres of kings, on whose supporting arm the goddess of liberty leans and whose daily utterances proclaim that peace, friendship and love once more bind the American people with the golden bands of an indissoluble and perpetual union; a press whose thousand tongues none can silence; whose champions—

"All unbribed at freedom's altar stand,
Faithful and firm, bright warders of the land."

Yes, my countrymen, the press and the brave and generous soldiers of our land have brought this night and these scenes to pass. All honor and love to both. We come as survivors of the great battle, which illustrated the greatness and glory of the American people, and dropping a curtain over the past, we hail you as our brothers and sisters with all the love and pride which must ever thrill the hearts of all good and true citizens of the continent of our commonwealths.

No more does that spirit animate us which once hurled our bodies against those unpregnable hosts that, thank God are no more forever. We have come forth from a baptism of blood and fire, and we have long years ago ceased to bear in our hearts any residium of the feeling born of the conflict. Did an unmanly feeling linger in our bosom, we would not be here today to grasp the hands of those who have met us with a brother's greeting and a brother's love above the ashes left by the war, and over the tombs of secession and African slavery, we have created a new empire and have built a temple to American liberty in which you and I can worship together and over it we have run up the star spangled banner, and we cling to it with all that ancient love which should ever dwell in the hearts of men and women from the lands of George Washington and William Penn. I utter it as a sentiment that comes welling up from every bosom of Virginia and the south, that the man who would rekindle again that feeling which filled our land with death, and tears, and grief, and mourning; graves, and suffering, is not only unworthy of the high title of an American citizen, but even that of a human being, and should find no home or friends on earth or in heaven.

Let no politician, for selfish and unworthy purposes, fan the dead embers of the fratricedal strife, but let the great, warm and generous heart of our nation, with the throb of the ocean, as if moved by all the tempests of God's whole universe, speak its thundered condemnation of any effort so vile, wicked and unworthy. No such lessons are taught to memory. The lives or deeds of Lincoln or Grant comes to us as echoes from their sacred tombs.

Oh! my country, what a calamity was it for the south when the assassin's bullet struck down Abraham Lincoln. In the midst of all the bloody tempests, he still had a soft place in his great heart for us. And now that the storm has passed and passion has subsided, who of the south does not love and revere his memory; and the memory of the great captain, who was kind and magnanimous in the hour of victory at Appomattox, who said to Lee: "Let your men take their horses home to make bread." Who, when he had triumphed, said, "let us have peace," and who, in his dying hour, declared that the greatest happiness he felt was to see good feelings springing up between the north and south. There is not a true man south today but what feels as if he would like to stand at the tomb of Lincoln and Grant, to plant a flower there, and to water it with a manly tear, in the presence of a feeling like this, too sacred and deep for utterance:

What matters it who shall keep the battle flags. They passed into your hands in a brave and manly combat, untouched by dishonor after a baptism of blood that made the grey jacket a mantle of glory, and we are as willing that your people should keep them as ours. They are in the hands of our government and brethren to whom our honor should be as dear as their own. Never again will the old battle flags wave in strife. They have gone down forever, but they went down in glory and in honor. They are dead, and we love and follow the new living flag which floats from Key West to the British channel; from Bunker Hill to San Francisco. As we look at the banner of our country, floating yonder, we only remember that since the birth of our nation it has been the emblem of liberty and the refuge of the oppressed. That southern and northern men bore it in triumph from Saratoga to Yorktown; from Lundy's Lane to New Orleans, and that as united brethren we floated it over the walls of Tripoli and the halls of the Montezumas. We forget that it was borne against us and as we see around us men of the north who have come down south and made our homes their homes, and our people their people, we hail today and henceforth all Americans everywhere as brothers, and claim that our home and kindred extend from sturdy Maine and the grand old bay state to; where the gentle breeze sighs through the orange groves of Florida; from where the Mississippi—the father of waters—heaves his mighty bosom to the great lakes; from the great lakes to the Pacific, where the republican Colossus holds in his benumbed grasp the yerbs of the Artic, and there in sight of the continent of Asia, proclaims the people united for all time and great in all the triumphs of the Anglo-Saxon race—a race buried and sunk out of sight forever. The bitter memories of war, and the griefs and sorrows of the north and south, if we recall them at all, let it be in dreams, poetry and homage. England remembers today the wars of the roses and the rival houses of York and Lancaster. The glorious and imperishable record of valor and renown is witten upon the highest realms of fame by both the north and south and claimed as a common privilege and joint offering for all time to come by the whole American people and their latest posterity. But while speaking of the deeds and glories of our men let not the deeds of our women be forgotten. Oh! who can tell of their agony, suffering and self sacrifice. I see them now hovering in both your hospital and ours like bright and beautiful angels of grace and mercy ready to conduct the departing spirits to paradise, mother, daughter, sister, wife, sweetheart, they fanned the fevered cheek, bathed the fevered brow, bedewed with their tears the couch of the dying heroes, wafted their souls to Heaven with their sighs and prayers and put flowers over their graves. And they could be as brave as men, too, when it was necessary. Why, the bravest woman I ever saw was a Pennsylvania girl who defied Pickett's whole division while we marched through a little town called Greencaster. She had on United States flags as an apron, which she defiantly waved up and down as our columns passed by and dared us to take it from her, and there was not one man of us who dared to do so. Struck by her courage and loyalty General Pickett, with hat off, gave her a military salute. My regiment presented arms and we cheered her with a good old-fashioned "rebel yell" which some of you boys here have doubtless heard. God bless the true and brave little woman. And she was as lovely as she was brave, and would that she were here to-day. that I might, in admiration of her pluck and truth, grasp the hand of that splendid and glorious type of American womanhood. She deserves a place by the side of those Carthagenian maidens who cut off their tresses as bow strings to send their lovers' arrows to the Roman's heart.

In coming here to night, of course, there are some sad thoughts mingled with our joy. Oh, what a slaughter of American manhood and valor there was on that day on your side and on ours. What would you not give if we could recall back to life your men and ours who so nobly fell on that fatal field? It is not for us to speak of their mighty valor. History has recorded it in undying words, and forms and colors. Would that the grand and heroic son of Pennsylvania—Hancock the superb—were here today. Would that Meade and McClellan and Reynolds, and Sedgewick, were here tonight; and that the Virginian, George H. Thomas, the Hannibal of your army of Tennessee; and above all, would that Lincoln and Grant were here to see this noble sight of brotherly love and heavenly hospitality. Lincoln and Grant were the men who guarded and directed the storm and who, when its fury was spent. were ready to say, "Peace be still" to the boisterous winds and the raging waters. Were they here we would join with you in doing them honor, for as Americans we now claim an interest in their glory and their graves. And who among you, warm, generous, kind, hospitable and full of brotherly love, as you have shown yourselves, will grudge to us or Virginia the proud honor or to the union that rich contribution of Virginia glory, when, at the roll call of our illustrious and mighty dead, to the names of Washington, Henry, Mason, Jefferson. Madison, Marshall and Monroe, we shall ask to add the names of Robert E. Lee; of Stonewall Jackson; of J. E. B. Stuart, and George E. Pickett—glorious representatives of that Virginia truth and valor and loyalty which propped the reeling fortunes of the revolution of '76 and bore the flag of victory, flowing like a heavenly meteor, from Boston to Yorktown.

My dear countrymen, let none but great and noble and kind words, thoughts and feelings, henceforth animate us for, the severer great and bitter trials of the American people. Let us with love, sympathy and a reverence too deep for expression, respect the sufferings and repair the injuries we have inflicted upon each other. Let us tread lightly bb each soldier's grave, whether from the north or the south, for he was an American brother. dying for his convictions. Let us imitate the example and follow the teachings of nature's great heart who, in winter spread an impartial mantle of snow on every soldier's grave; in spring puts green sod and flowers upon each humble mound; in autumn decks all alike with the russet and golden splendors of her falling leaves, and our dews by night and showers by day waters them with her tears and by the smiling sunshine of heaven warms their cold bosoms with rays of eternal light, direct from the center of the universe. Let us thank God that the grim visage of war has smoothed his wrinkled front and that peace spreads her blessed wings over our lands; that as one nation we follow but one flag; and that but one destiny awaits the American people; and as long as Bunker Hill and Yorktown shall lift their lights towards the heavens above the watery main, so long will Virginia and the south gratefully remember and cherish this night's work and welcome.

Standing here near the great battlefield enriched by the best blood of the north and the south; with the stars of heaven as our witness, on the soil of the dear old keystone state, the historic arch of the union; the great state whose bells first rang out in the city of brotherly love the birth of American liberty on the morning of the revolution, I pledge you with my hand—my heart goes lovingly and gratefully with my hand--that Virginia and Pennsylvania, as in yore, forever locked in loving embrace, in peace and in war, in sunshine and in storm, will forever bear aloft the stars and stripes, and stand by the union of our forefathers until the morning of the resurrection.

Speeches were also made by General W. F. (Baldy) Smith, General Joshua T. Owen, General Isaac P. Wistar, Colonel John H. Toggart, and others for the "blue" and by Colonel Charles T. Loehr, secretary of Pickett's Division association, Colonol J. F. Crocker, Colonel Robert M. Stribling, Dr. J. A. Marshall, Colonel Timoleum Smith, Colonel Kirk Otey, and others on behalf of the "gray."

John W. Frazier, secretary of the committee of arrangements, stated that letters of regret had been received from the president and his cabinet, from Senator Sherman, Governor Fitzhugh Lee, Hon. Edwin M. Fitler, mayor of Philadelphia; General Louis Wagner, Hon. George W. Childs, George William Curtis, Charles A. Dana, General D. H. Hastings, adjutant general of Pennsylvania: Gibson Peacock, and others, two of which—one from the president and the other from Senator Sherman—he would read:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. P., June 24, 1887.—I have received your invieation to attend, as a guest of the Philadelphia Brigade, the reunion of ex-confederate soldiers of Pickett's division who survived their terrible charge at Gettysburg, and those of the union army still living, by whom it was heroically resisted. The fraternal meeting of these soldiers upon the battlefiejd where, twenty-four years ago, in deadly fray they fiercely sought each other's lives; where they saw their comrades fall, and where all their thoughts were of vengeance and destruction, will illustrate the general impulse of brave men and their honest desire for peace and reconciliation. The friendly assault there to be made will be resistless, because inspired by American chivalry, and its result will be glorious, because conquered hearts will be its trophies of success. Thereafter this battle field will be consecrated by a victory which shall presage the end of bitterness, of strife, of exposure, of the sincerity which concedes hatred by professions of kindness, the condemnation of frensied appeals to passion for unworthy purposes, and the beating down of all that stands in the way of the destiny of our united country. While those who fought, and who have so much to forgive, lead in the pleasant ways of peace, how wicked appears the traffic in sectional hate and the betrayal of patriotic sentiment. It surely cannot be wrong to desire settled the quiet which lights for our entire country the path to prosperity and greatness, nor need the lesson of war be forgotten and its results jeopardized in the wish for that genuine fraternity which hates sectional pride and glory.

I should be very glad to accept your invitation and be with you at this very interesting reunion, but other arrangements have been already made and my official duties here will prevent my doing so. Hoping that the occasion will be as successful and useful as its promoters can desire. I am yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

SENATOR SHERMAN'S LETTER.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, June 18, 1887.—Your note of the 16th inviting me to be present as the guest of the Philadelphia brigade, at Gettysburg on the 2d, 3d and 4th days of July next, to attend a reunion of the surviving members of that brigade and of Pickett's division of the confederate army, is received. It would give me pleasure to witness so interesting an event, but an engagement made here for the fourth of July will not permit. Such a reunion on the battlefield of Gettysburg, of opposing forces so distinguished for courage, heroism and great losses will be striking and the hopeful evidence of respect that brave soldiers always cherish for gallant enemies, and of lessening the animosities of war. The union soldiers readily and heartily acknowledge the courage and honesty of the purpose of the confederate soldiers, and this feeling is, I believe, as readily reciprocated by them. There should be no enmity or prejudice between them, and now that all alike feel that an indestructible union binds us together there should be a cordial and hearty fellowship between the "blue and the gray."

But the feeling should be accompanied by a sincere and hearty desire to preserve for future ages the beneficent results of war. In this, the south, as well as the north, is deeply interested. It was to preserve the union and to secure to all the blessings of liberty that the war was waged and won. Upon this basis there would be no longer a danger line between union and confederate soldiers, or northern and southern citizens, but the courage and patriotism of both would be the common pride and heritage of the American people.

I sincerely trust the reunion proposed will be an important step towards so desirable a result. Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Sergeant Charles Loehr, secretary of Pickett's Division association, was mainly instrumental in bringing his southern friends to Gettysburg. After the refusal of the Gettysburg Memorial association to permit them to erect their monument where General Armstead fell, he has worked day and night for months to make the southern end of the reunion a success. William S. Stockton, John W. Frazier, A. W. McDermott, Hugh McLane, William G. Mason, John E. Reilley, John L. Bowers, Julius Allen, William Prior and Colonel Charles H. Barnes, were most active in bringing about the reunion from the Philadelphia end of the line, the first five named having been working the matter up for more than six months. The happiest hit of all was the combination blue and gray badges of the California regiment, the Seventy-first of the Pennsylvania line.

GETTYSBURG ILLUMINATED.

Gettysburg presents a gay and animated scene to-night. Houses are decorated with flags, evergreens and bunting. The streets are brilliantly illuminated and thronged with thousands of people. During the day visitors arrived on all trains, and when the Philadelphia brigade arrived at 6 o'clock, with two thousand more, the hotels and boarding houses overflowed, and quarters were as hard to find as they were twenty-four years ago tonight.

At eight o'clock Mrs. General Pickett arrived, accompanied by her son, and was immediately driven to the Springs hotel. After securing quarters, the Philadelphia brigade, escorted by the Grand Army band of Gettysburg, marched to the Harrisburg depot to receive their guests.

"THE REBEL YELL."

At 8:35 a ringing cheer from the Philadelphia brigade, promptly and heartily answered by the well-known rebel yell, announced that the visitors had arrived and two hundred of Pickett's veterans marched out and surrendered themselves to the hospitality of their friends.

As the procession moved along Chambersburg street to the Public square, cheers and applause greeted it at every step, The confederates, who were armed with rockets, discharged them as they marched along, proudly bearing the stars and stripes in their midst, the only flag in the line, and responded heartily to the greetings with their peculiar battle yell, so well known here, to the great delight of the assembled crowd.

When the procession reached Center square the union and confederate lines were drawn up facing. The confederates stepped forward saying: "Here we are once more together. Let us shake hands. Let us trade coffee."

The bands played "Way Down South in Dixie." Fireworks lit up the sky and all the people cheered.

At 9:35 the procession moved to the courthouse, where a camp fire was held. The doors were thrown open and the band entered, followed by Pickett's men. They proceeded to the front and seated themselves in chairs. In a few minutes the building was filled to overflowing. Standing room could not be obtained. When all was ready General Burns assisted Mrs. General Pickett to the stand and, amid tremendous cheers, which shook the building, introduced her and her son to the audience. She was visibly affected, and with difficulty restrained the tears. Whenever General Pickett's name was mentioned the cheering was tremendous. When Colonel Ayelette, becoming excited and branching off somewhat from his prepared oration, mentioned the flag of the union the whole audience arose and shouted itself hoarse. As soon as the president's letter was read, General Burns jumped up and proposed "Three cheers for the president of the United States." These were given standing and with telling effect.

A MORMON SCHEME.

Non-Mormons Will Have Nothing to do With the Constitutional Convention.

SALT LAKE, July 2.—J. B. Rosborough, chairman of the democratic territorial committee of Utah, and William H. James, chairman of the republican territorial committee, have issued a public address in reference to the movement for statehood in Utah. The address refers to the fact that both the republican and democratic parties in Utah refused to participate in the convention, and adds:

The whole affair is a church party movement, conducted solely by members of the Mormon church to obtain for it statehood. The earnest private solicitations of many of them failed to induce a single non-Mormon to become a delegate. All non-Mormons in Utah oppose the movement as insincere and fraught with serious consequences, if successful.

The constitutional convention of seventy-five delegates has been in session since Thursday. The constitution adopted in 1882 is made the basis of the new constitution. A committee of thirteen, appointed by the president, John T. Caine, delegate to congress, has been diligently at work amending the old document and framing new sections. The most important change, so far reported, are provisions in the bill of rights declaring the entire separation of church and state, and establishing a minority representative. It is declared that there shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the state, but the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience shall never be infringed, nor shall any person be compelled to support any form of worship, nor shall any control of or interference with the rights of conscience be permitted, nor any preference by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship. The rights of minorities are to be preserved inviolate. Other important additions to the constitution are expected. The convention will take a recess to celebrate the fourth of July.

A CITY IN DARKNESS.

Atchison, Kansas, Out of Funds to Run the Town.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., July 2.—The closing of saloons in Atchison has cut off the most profitable source of revenue, amounting to thousands of dollars per year, and as a result the city has not revenue to keep going. Yesterday the police force, with the exception of marshal and one officer, were suspended from duty. The mayor has also notified the firemen that their services will be dispensed with. Gas and electric lights will be shut off today.

Murder and Arson.

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 2.—A Durant special says: W. H. Carnish, a young merchant doing business at the village of French Camp, was murdered Thursday night and his body was burned in his store. George Bryan, Sam Garrett and Monroe Boyd, who were in the store at a late hour, have been arrested, charged with the crime.

Case Against Penitentiary Lessees.

JACKSON, Miss., July 2.—The case of the state against the lessees of the penitentiary and their bondsmen was called in the circuit court today. The amount involved is $80,000, which, it is claimed, is due the state for two years' rent, for which the lessees are in arrears.

FIREWORKS ABLAZE.

Two Large Conflagrations in New York City.

TWO MEN PERISH IN THE FLAMES

Broadway Blocked During the Fire—Hard Work of the Firemen to Extinguish the Blaze—Fires Elsewhere.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The fireworks factory of P. J. Keary & Bros., at 343 Broadway, burned this afternoon. Two men were burned to death and there is a loss of $200,000. The factory is a five-story brown stone building, with an "L," on Leonard street. An explosion occurred in the basement, and in a few minutes the whole building was ablaze. Twenty-five clerks and employes, who were at the south premises ran for life, but Albert Eisles, stock clerk, and August Hesler, salesman, were too late. Their bodies were recovered. Nellie Meyles, cashier, was carried in an insensible condition from her desk on the ground floor. Fifteen engines responded to the alarm call, and Chief Shay took command of the firemen. The building and contents were entirely consumed. The Keary's stock was valued at $150,000, and the building was worth probably $50,000. The cause of the explosion in the basement is unexplained.

Another fire occurred on Broadway, this time at Nos. 628 and 630, and caused a blockade, this evening. There was a great blaze and greater smoke, and fears that the flames would spread were not checked until the firemen stated that the fire was under control, which was not until two hours after it broke out. At 9 o'clock three alarms were sent out, and work on these flames added materially to the duties of the firemen tonight. Ball & Co., clothiers, on the first and second floors, and Vanderhoof & Co., manufacturers of straw goods, on the third floor, were the principal sufferers. The damage is stated to be $175,000, of which Ball & Co. lose most. The exact losses are unknown.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 2.—The extensive window glass works of Stewart, Estep & Co., on Jane street, south side, were totally destroyed by fire at 4 o'clock this morning. Two stables and a number of small frame buildings adjoining were also consumed. The loss is estimated at $50,000; fully insured. The fire was caused by the explosion of natural gas. The works had closed down for the summer. They will be rebuilt in time for fall resumption.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 2.—The mayor of Mitchellville, sixteen miles east of here, telegraphed at an early hour this morning that his town was burning up and asked for help. A chemical engine and hook and ladder trucks were sent from here by special train. Five business houses were burned before the fire was gotten under control. The loss has not been learned.

SHERMAN DENIES

That He Said Mr. Blaine Would Not be a Candidate.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 2.—Senator Sherman passed through the city this morning, en route from the east for his home in Ohio. In an interview he emphatically denied the statement about Mr. Blaine, credited to him in a New York interview, published in this morning's papers. Said he:

"I was not interviewed in New York. What appears in the morning papers was manufactured. I was in a room at the hotel where several gentlemen were talking, but I was not interviewed. I never said Mr. Blaine was not a candidate for the presidency. I don't know whether he is a candidate or not, and certainly would not make such a statement unless I did know. Nor did I say anything about his giving himself up to literature. Mr. Blaine and I are the best of friends, and it is unkind to put words into my mouth that I never uttered. Some politicians say that he may not have the same element of support in New York that he had during the last campaign."

SEEKING THE PRESIDENT'S LIFE.

Arrest of a Crank with a Shot Gun—Other Washington Gossip.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The police have taken into custody Benedict Krebs, a crank, who is under the impression that the president has defrauded him of a vast sum of money and who has been threatening to kill President Cleveland with a shot gun when he attends church. Krebs is held at the station for medical examination of his mental condition.

The secretary of the treasury today appointed Joseph J. Greeves to be storekeeper and gauger in the tenth Ohio district, and Miles E. Macpadden to be gauger in the first Illinois district.

There was an unexpended balance of nearly $300,000 in appropriations for fuel, lights and water, and for contingent expenses of public buildings under the treasury department during the fiscal year just ended, and the money has been covered into the treasury.

The commissioner of patents today, with the approval of the secretary of interior, furnished for publication a statement upon the subject of the deficiency in the accounts of the late Levi Bacon, financial clerk of the patent office. It appears from this statement that no searching investigation of Mr. Bacon's accounts has yet been made. A committee was appointed, however, to ascertain in a general way what seemed to be the condition of his accounts. The report of this committee shows that there is an apparent shortage of about $33,000, about $4,500 of which was the attorney's deposit fund, leaving an apparent deficiency of about $28,500 in his account with the government, against which were found due bills from employes and others dishonored drafts and checks and miscellaneous memoranda of indebtedness, aggregating about $17,000, which leaves wholly unaccounted for of government funds about $11,000.

THE KEY WEST FEVER.

Report of Surgeon Glennon on the Disease.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—The marine hospital bureau has received a report from Assistant Surgeon Glennon, at Key West, showing that up to June 30 there had been 51 cases of yellow fever in that city and 20 deaths, and that 8 cases had developed in various sections of the city since June 25, most of which were persons who had lived in the city less than five years. These new cases are locally known as "stranger's fever." Dr. Glennon says that the old Creole treatment is being gradually carried out, which begins with a mustard bath and is followed by calomel and castor oil. The character of the disease appears to be of a kidney type. A prognosis, he says, depends mainly on the amount of albumen present, death usually resulting from euremia.

Convicts in the California Penitentiary Try to Get Away.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 2.—An attempt was made by several prisoners to escape from the state prison at Folsom, this afternoon. The convicts were employed outside the walls and on one of their number making a break for liberty, he was followed by four others. The guard fired several shots without effect, and they fearing that a serious attempt would be made by all the convicts to get away, opened on the fleeing men with a Gatling gun. One convict was instantly killed and another received three fatal wounds. This ended the emuete and all convicts ran for cover inside the prison gates.

Crab Venders Murdered.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 2.—[Special.]—Near the village of Adams Run, Colleton county, yesterday, two little negro boys were quietly walking along the public road, carrying between them a large basket containing crabs, which they were endeavoring to sell, when they were accosted by a negro woman, who begged for a crab. It was given her, when she asked for another. Her second request being refused, she rushed into her house, near the roadside, and in a minute returned with a revolver, which she discharged at the two little crab venders. The ball passed entirely through the body of one and lodged in that of the other. One of the boys was dying when last heard from, and the other is believed to be mortally wounded. The woman fled and has not yet been arrested.

NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The Trial of the Leipsic Prisoners—Charges Against General Boulanger

Copyrighted, 1887, by New York Associated Press.]

BERLIN, July 2.—Once Europe is able to feel secure in peace, a move will be attempted in the direction of abolishing the protectionist system. The advantage of free trade is found in the Hungarian commerce returns, which shows that three-fourths of the total exports last year were to Austria where there was no custom barriers.

It is evident that the accession of the Rouvier cabinet has failed to fulfill the expectations of the improved relations between France and Germany.

French persecution of foreigners is again the subject of comment by the German press.

The North German Gazette reprints an article from the National Zeitung, of which the following is an extract:

"What will seemingly justify the European governments in refusing to enter the Paris exhibition is the persecution of foreigners, not only Germans, but German speaking Swiss and Austrians; and even Englishmen are objects of rude and incessant attacks by the French press, and in numerous cases are molested and maltreated. It is absurd to invite people they hate to participate in their exhibition, and unless changes occur, the absurdity will be reflected in the fate of the exhibition."

The Cologne Gazette publishes a proclamation which, it says the Batriotic League has been trying to circulate in Alsace-Lorrane. The Gazette again asserts that General Boulanger, before his disposition from the war minister, really intended a coup d' etat and was only prevented from carrying out his designs by General Saussier. No action has been taken in regard to the release of Herr Karchlin, one of the convicted members of the French Patriotic League, and neither side seems willing to take in the matter. The Cross Gazette says it would be impossible for Germany to proceed first in the matter, as that would in France be considered as an act of feebleness on her part. In the trial of Herr Klein, for treason in supplying the French with intelligence concerning a German fortress which commences at Leipsic Monday, thirteen witnesses and four experts have been subpœnaed. The trial will be conducted in public by special order of the government. Evidence will be introduced to prove that Klein had been in receipt of a monthly salary of two hundred marks from the French government.

The relations between Germany and Russia are becoming incomprehensible. While there is a seeming concord between the two counts, the war of extermination against everything German is even increasing in Russia. This action on the part of Russia results in intense bitterness against that country, in Berlin, where leading journals talk of reprisals and self-defense. The first symptom of this feeling has been an outcry against Germans investing Russian stocks, the Cross Gazette and Cologne Gazette arguing that the government which virtually expropriates foreigners will not stiple to defraud its creditors if war is furnished as a necessary pretext. A semi-official organ, the Post, is still more alarming. It says that in event of war with Germany, which many influential persons in Russia are striving to bring about, a stroke of the pen would suffice to deprive Germans of all their sinews of war in the shape of the milliards they have confided to the care of Russia. These articles showing a growing distrust of Russia have already had their effect in a fall in prices of Russian securities all round. The increasing efforts of Prince Hohenlohe, Count Henckel and Herr Kramsta, the largest German landowners in the Russian provinces, to have themselves exempted from the effects of the czar's ukase, failed of the desired result, the St. Petersburg government refusing to make any exception in favor of anybody, and therefore these landowners, together with Prince Radziwill and Prince Reuss, find themselves compelled to sell their estates in Russia at a virtual sacrifice.

WOODS'S ESCAPADES.

How He Took in the People of Griffin.

HIS CONFIDENTIAL MODE OF BUSINESS.

Elected Captain of the Spalding Grays, and Becomes the Husband of a Wealthy Lady—Wound Up by Forgery.

GRIFFIN, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—Griffin is just now stirred up from center to circumference over the sudden and mysterious disappearance of one of her citizens. A full statement of the coming of the party and his history while here is demanded by his conduct.

In February, 1886, a tall, erect, prepossessing stranger, weak from ill-health, walked into the Nelms house and in a bold, free hand, wrote "H. O. Wood, Boston." Mr. Wood had every appearance of a gentleman and was given one of the best rooms in the house. Mr. Wood soon began to make the acquaintance of the people and impressed all favorably. He showed clearly that he was a man of extraordinary intelligence, well read, and a man who had seen much of the world. He began to grow strong in health, and expressed himself so pleased and delighted with our climate that he had decided to make this his permanent home. He was elected a member of the Grantland club, and was soon the leading society man of Griffin. The impression was made that he was very rich; he was lavish with his money, discussed improvements of different kinds with our moneyed men, and expressed a willingness and a desire to put his money in sound enterprises.

When spring came he purchased one of the handsomest turnouts that ever rolled through the streets of Griffin, and the man or woman who was fortunate enough to ride out with Major Wood, as he was now called, was considered a favored one, and was looked upon with envy by the less fortunate ones. Major Wood was now the petted favorite of society. No tea or dining was complete without the presence of this entertaining and brilliant son of favoritism. He verily lived the life of a lord. He had his servants, who went and came at his beck and call; he had the freedom of the city, and was received and welcomed wherever he called. His star was at the zenith of its glory, and he floated gracefully and quietly on the wave of public favor. The fourth of July came and the Spalding Greys gave a barbecue. Major Wood was called on for a speech, and made a pretty, patriotic address. He said: "For four years I carried the musket and haversack and wore the blue; I met on many a field the boys who wore the gray, and stand here a living witness to your bravery, heroism and patriotism. During the war I respected your devotion to the cause for which you fought, and while I then and now differ with you in reference to that cause, I yet honor you, and say that braver boys than those who wore the grey never went to battle." Many patriotic expressions made by him in his speech had a telling effect on the Spalding Greys, and in a short time they elected him captain, and the Spalding Greys, who for four long years fought for secession and states' rights, grounded their arms and elected a man who fought them in that sacred cause their captain. Soon after this election the captain gave the company, and a few friends, an elegant banquet. The magnificent plan upon which the banquet was arranged was the sensation of the hour, and Captain Wood was wafted higher upon the tide of popular favor.

In the meantime Cupid had not passed the captain by untouched. The piercing black eyes and brilliant intellect of one of Griffin's wealthiest daughters had had its effects upon the captain's heart. He was all devotion to this lady, and on the 31st of August, and after only six months' residence in our midst, he had successfully cleared the course of all contending rivals, and in the parlor of the young lady's father, as the sun was reddening the western skies he led this lady to the marriage altar and they were pronounced man and wife. They immediately took the north bound train and left for an extensive tour through Europe. The day after the marriage was spent in Atlanta. The father of the bride had given her as a wedding present five or six hundred acres of the most valuable lands in the county, lying broadside of the city and almost entirely in native growth woods, valued at from $40 to $50 per acre. While spending the day in Atlanta, Captain Wood mortgaged this land to the Corbin Banking company, for twelve hundred and fifty dollars. When the papers were sent here to be recorded, and became public news, the eyes of the Griffinites popped with surprise and astonishment. Why should the brilliant son of thousands of dollars mortgage his wife's bridal present? This transaction brought out others of a questionable character, which had been shrouded in secrecy. It was learned that Wood came to Griffin with only one thousand dollars, that shortly afterwards he borrowed eight hundred dollars from an Atlanta gentlemen with whom he had become intimate. He had also got possession of a note from a lady here by representing that he and two moneyed men here were soon to start a bank and she could put this note, which was on a firm here, in as that much stock. After obtaining the note Wood discounted the same at the bank here and got about seventeen hundred and fifty dollars on it. During this time Captain Wood was having erected on SouthHill street a beautiful house on one of the finest four acre lots in Griffin; the grounds were being elaborately graded and terraced, the house being built in the latest style, private water and gas works were being put in, and the score of workmen were busy finishing the place for the reception of Captain Wood and his bride on their return from their bridal tour through the old world. The tour was made in the very best style, a colored valet was carried at the expense of fifty dollars a month, the very best that Europe could afford was not above the elegant taste of the newly wedded pair, and to them their tour was a happy honeymoon, ignorant and innocent of the change rapidly taking place in the public mind at home in reference to the bridegroom.

In November the bridal pair returned home. Their surprise was great when they found that the knee that had bowed a few short months ago to the gallant captain had grown stiff, the friendly and cordial greeting that he was wont to receive had become as cold and chilled as the November air. Griffin had heard too much; she wanted an explanation; she had courted and favored, but the favored one had violated her confidence. What was his explanation?

The captain and his bride were indignant, grew themselves cold and indifferent to the opinion of the people, and virtually said, "What has been done was our private affair, the world has nothing to do with it."

A short while after his return from Europe, the party from whom he borrowed the eight hundred dollars and friends of the lady from whom he got the note, begun to press him for a settlement of these matters. He put off and delayed them, until threats of an exposure were made, when he finally sold the land that was given to his wife for twenty dollars an acre—less than half its value. He paid the Atlanta man his eight hundred dollars, the lady's note, and raised the mortgage given to the Corbin Banking company.

Wood attempted to drive down the unfavorable opinion with his handsome equipages and elegant and fashionable mode of living. His home was a perfect gem of beauty and comfort, everything that could be had to make a home attractive was procured, and public opinion to some extent melted. There were some who renewed their faith in the man and became his friends. To these he unbosomed himself and exhibited letters and papers to show that he was a man of considerable means and of high position in Boston. His persuasive manner told on these persons, and they strongly advocated the man. Others were still doubtful, while a few were open in their denouncement of the man as a fraud and adventurer.

Matters went on this way until about the middle of May, when Wood announced through the press that he had organized a bank, to be known as the "Merchants' National bank," with a capital of $200,000—that $150,000 had been put up by a Boston syndicate and $50,000 by moneyed men here; that all the stock had been taken and takers need apply. He procured a building and began to have the same put in condition on a style that made people wonder. The finest and most elaborate furniture and fixtures were ordered; the building was to be renovated from top to bottom, and as he said, "It would be the handsomest banking house in Georgia." During the preparation Wood went to the president of a private banking establishment there and in the most suave manner offered to buy his bank. The banker said he would sell, and said he asked $75,000 for the concern. Wood said he would look into the matter and give him a reply. In a few days he returned and said he would accept the proposition, and in the most assuming manner said I will pay you two thousand dollars cash, and give you my note for the balance. Fortunately this gentleman had not been one of the believers in Wood, and he deliberately rose, took Wood by the arm, carried him to the door and said: Mr. Wood I can get hundreds of my own people who would make the same proposition. Good morning Mr. Wood.

Wood continued preparations for his bank. About the first of June he went to two gentlemen, who were to be officers in the bank and got $2,000 from each of them, promising to issue stock for the same. To one of those gentlemen he gave a receipt, to the other he did not give a scratch of a pen. It is reported that he got $600 from another gentleman, making $4,600. He then left for Cincinnati to see the Hall safe and lock company about the vault. That was three weeks ago last Thursday. On his arrival in Cincinnati he telegraphed here that he was called to New York. Since then not a word has been heard from H. O. Wood. The most persistent inquiry in Cincinnati, New York and Boston fails to get a reply. Inquiry made to Boston disclose startling facts. The references given by Wood were fraudulent. H. O. Wood is not known in Boston. Although he claimed that the treasury department was ready to issue the bill for the new bank and exhibited a letter to that effect, the treasury department disclaims any knowledge of such a bank and says that no application for the establishment of the same has been made.

H. O. Wood also forged the name of his father-in-law to a note and obtained four thousand dollars on the same from the Gate City National bank in Atlanta.

The conduct of Wood shows him to be a villan of the deepest dye. He seems to have concocted a deep laid scheme to rob the people of Griffin for as much as possible. Not content with that he has ruined and blasted the life of a noble woman, wrecked and desolated a happy home, financially involved an old man just tottering on the banks of the grave. The indignation of Griffin is at fever heat, and if hands could be laid upon the cold, calculating rascal, that in one short eighteen months sowed so much disaster and unhappiness in our midst, it would not be a summer day for him.

The wife and family are prostrated with grief, and the loving hearts of our people go out to them in their sadness and depression.

A POSTAL THIEF

Is Given Five Years in the Penitentiary by Judge Speer.

MACON, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—On yesterday the case of the United States vs. Henry Jones, charged with robbing the mails was concluded. This has been the most interesting criminal case of the term. Mr. Dessau completed the argument he was making on the day before against the validity of the indictment. Mr. Gurry, the district attorney, replied in a brief, concluding argument with much clearness and strength. Judge Speer charged the jury upon the main question raised by the defendant's council. The charge to the jury was as follows:

The postal system is established by law to secure the safe and speedy means of intercommunication between the people, and the safe and certain transmission of money, written instruments representing money and certain other articles of value. The custody of the postal officials, is the custody of law, not only the benefit of the sender of matter, but also for the benefit of the person to whom it is sent, and one who steals from the mail a letter or its contents while it is in process of transmission in fact steals property in which ordinarily more than one person is interested.

You have served nearly seven months of the term which the district judges originally imposed upon you for the crime. That term was five years, and it is now adjudged and sentenced by the court that you be imprisoned at hard labor in the Albany county penitentiary for the full term of five years and five months, and that you be thence discharged.

Four of the gamblers—Ben Meeks, Levi Lowenthal, Manuel Engle and the old man Meeks—are in jail, having failed to pay the fine and costs imposed on them for gambling.

THE NAVAL STORES LEGISLATION.

The Committee Proposes to Work on the Legislature.

JESUP, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—The committee appointed by the Naval Stores Manufacturers' Protective association, at its meeting in Jesup, on April 14th, met at Waycross on Monday, the 27th, and performed its labor of drafting a bill to be introduced in the next legislature. If passed, it will bring about the much-needed reform in the present system of inspection of naval stores, and the nefarious practice of horning rosin and spirits, which has done so much to cripple the industry, now the second largest in the state. With an honest system of inspection, fair alike to producer and consumer, with the grading of rosin and the gauging of spirits virtually guaranteed by the state, through its heavily bonded inspectors, confidence will be restored, trade will be increased, and prices will run higher. The bill also provides for the appointing of inspectors in the interior, at present impracticable, thus opening the way for direct purchasing of rosin and spirits, and avoiding the expense of middlemen and heavy freights. The committee consisted of Hon. L. Johnson, ex-senator from the third district; Hon. J. L. Hond, senator from eighth district; Colonel John E. Donaldson, of Bainbridge; Mr. Joseph Baker, of Alapaha, and Mr. A. P. Brantley, of Blackshear. The reputation of these gentlemen for integrity, and as successful business men, is too well established to need comment. It is fair, however, to state that they disclaim "having any axes to grind;" are prejudiced against no class, and are influenced solely by their desire to see this large industry placed on the high plane of business integrity it deserves.

Sheep-Shearing in Terrell.

DAWSON, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—Mr. A. C. Hill, of this county, sheared 300 head of sheep last year, and 200 head this year. He lost 100 head by dogs. He lives in the eastern portion of the county. Dr. J. T. Lamar, living in the northern portion of the county, says that sheep are scarce in his district, and growing scarcer every year on account of the worthless dogs. Mr. W. D. Murray, in the lower part of the county, says there's no sheep worth mentioning in his district, from the same cause. It seems that many men in Terrell county are so closely related to the dog that they prefer it to the sheep.

Railroad Connection Sought.

PRATTSBURG, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—The people of Prattsburg are exercising every nerve in their efforts to influence the projectors of the A. B. and G. W. railroad to change thier route in order that Prattsburg may be a way station. They have subscribed $75,000 to the road, and men are canvassing the proposed route every day having fine success. From here alone we ship more than 5,000 bales, and when the road comes 8,000 will be below our expectations.

Honored by Degrees.

DAWSON, Ga., July 2.—[Special.]—At the recent commencement of the South Georgia Male and Female college of this place, the degree of A. B. was conferred upon the following young men: Mr. S. P. Thornton, of South Carolina, and Messrs. W. C. Moses and J. M. Christian, of Hart county, Ga.

WHAT KILLS AMERICANS,

Fast Living—Reckless Eating—Hard Drinking—Poor Sleeping—Social Jealousy—Political Ambition—Violent Passions—The Race for Money.

The alarming disease of this country is nervous debility and prostration. It goes under many names but it is essentially the same complaint. Hospitals and private institutions for nervous patients are crowded. The average of life in the United States is decreasing every year. Sudden deaths from nervous collapse among our business, professional and public men are so frequent as scarcely to excite remark. The majority of suicides, committed without apparent reason, or under so-called "depression of spirits," are really prompted by nervous prostration, which is a fruitful source of insanity and crime, with all their grief and horror.

These facts are startling. They threaten the very life of the nation. They assail the springs of its power and prosperity. They wreck manhood's strength and woman's usefulness and beauty.

Every one should know the causes. What are they? The answer is easy and terribly plain: Our vicious personal habits; our careless and lawless eating and drinking; the intense mental and physical strain arising from our mad race after money, position and influence; the fears and struggles of poverty; the use of narcotics and stimulants; our fashion of turning day into night and night into day; and, briefly, our desperate willingness to pay any price for an hour's pleasure or success. So we burn life's candle at both ends and fill the lunatic asylums and the graveyards.

The disease from which we suffer and die is, in plain English, Nervous Dyspepsia, as it is seated in the Nerves and in the organs of Digestion, Assimilation and Nutrition. Healthy digestion being impeded or destroyed, the whole body, nerves included, is literally starved; even when there is no emaciation to tell the sad story.

Nervous prostration sends out its warnings:—headache in the morning; a persistent dull heaviness or aching at the base of the brain; wakefulness; loss of appetite and disgust with food; loss of mental energy and interest in ordinary duties and business; restlessness and anxiety without any assignable reason; eructations; bad breath; foul mucuous on the teeth; occasional giddiness; palpitation of the heart; sallowness of the skin; coated tongue and gradual failure of strength and ambition.

The remedy is a total abandonment of the habits and customs which cause the disease in each individual case, and the use of Shaker Extract of Roots (Segel's Syrup) to cure the mischief already done. This great remedy, prepared by the Shaker Community of Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., is especially adapted to eradicate Nervous Dyspepsia. To do this it acts directly and gently but powerfully upon the disorered stomach, liver and kidneys, restoring their tone and vigor, promoting the secretion of bile, expelling waste matters from the system, and purifying the blood.

Upon the nervous system Shaker Extract (Seigel's Syrup) acts as a safe and wholesome anodyne without the slightest narcotic effect, and then leaves the nerves to regain their natural tone and strength through its wonderful influence upon the functions of nutrition.

It is safe to say more norvous dyspeptics have been restored by it from the depths of misery to a fresh enjoyment of life and labor than by any or all other forms of treatment combined.

Safety from Malaria.

The most vigorous constitution, and the strongest physique, are not proof against a disease, the germs of which impregnate the air we breathe and the water we drink. The true preparative, the surest defense, is to fortify the system with a medicine which possesesses specific virtues as a safeguard and remedy. Hostetters Stomach Bitters is precisely this article—proved by conclusive tests to be so. Not only on this continent, wherever miasma gives birth to the malarial infection, but in the tropics, where fever and ague assumes its most malignant types, this incomparable, popular and deserving medicine has, for over a third of a century, shown its efficacy. Chills and fever, dumb ague, bilious remittent alike yield to its influence and are prevented by it. The word "fail" has no place in the lexicon of possibilities when this peerless article is used. It tones the stomach, arouses the liver when sluggish, and promotes healthful activity of the kidneys and bladder.

J. J. Flynn, General Eastern Agent, 23 Park Row, New York City.

ATLANTA, GA., JULY 3, 1887.

Mayor Cooper and the Salvation Army.

THE CONSTITUTION has not been a champion of the Salvation Army. On the contrary, our wayward course has long ago consigned us and ours to the devil, in the opinion of their captain, Ella Brucker and the gorgeous General Light. In spite of this, we cannot resist putting on record our opinion that the order of Mayor Cooper, threatening to arrest these religionists if they attempt to parade on the 4th of July, is arbitrary, unjust, and, in this land of religious liberty, untenable.

There is a crowd of people who are banded together in a religious work. They propose to march the streets on the 4th of July, a day commemorative of the pledge of this country to the fullest religious liberty. Mayor Cooper says they shall not parade. His reason is that he does not believe in their methods. That reason is hardly sound. No man is judge, in the sight of the law, of what is good religion, and what is bad religion. If any official had the right to establish his own opinion as the law in such matters, the Jew would not let the Christian parade, the Christian would obstruct the Jew, the Catholic would stop the Baptist, and the Methodist would halt the Catholic in the name of the Lord. The constitution of the United States, the establishment of which the 4th of July celebrates, declares that there shall be the fullest religious liberty for every sect and every individual.

The right to assemble and to parade the streets is a common right of Americans. It is one of which they are properly jealous, and which should be denied them only in extremest cases. Even in Canada the Orangemen and Irishmen are permitted to parade, though parading brings on almost certain riot. In Chicago there is no law to prevent even the anarchists from parading, the utmost the police can do being to arrest those who are disorderly. Here we have a body of religionists, certainly recognized in every English-speaking city, and permitted to march through any street. There is not a possibility of rioting, and the procession can do nothing more than to enliven what will otherwise be a very dull "Fourth." The mayor says to them, however, they shall not parade, and if they attempt it they shall be thrown into jail.

This order strikes deeper than the Salvation Army. It involves the right of a mayor to prohibit citizens from parading the streets on a national holiday, in time of profound peace. There are many respectable citizens in the ranks of the army—earnest, sincere Christians, whatever may be said of the leaders. It would be interesting to know how long the mayor could keep these citizens in jail if he arrested them for simply parading the streets in violation of his order. The utmost the mayor was called on to do was to put these people on notice that if their parade was disorderly, those who were guilty of disorder would be promptly arrested. Whatever we may think of the "army"—and we do not think very well of it—this much would have met the full duty of the mayor. If the right of the mayor to say the Salvation Army shall not parade is admitted without protest, it may not be long before another mayor will prohibit some other society from forming in procession along the streets, and then there might be serious trouble. This protest we put on record here. Mayor Cooper had no right to issue such an order, and still less reason. He may enforce it, because the police are strong and the Salvation Army is weak. But, all the same, the order is arbitrary, unwise, and, on important occasions and under equal conditions, perfectly indefensible.

WOULDN'T it be well for a secretary of the treasury under a democratic administration to stop fooling with Wall street? What has the custodian of the people's money to do with the speculators? Is he employed [illegible] make money scarce or plenty among the [illegible]t men and robbers who consort to[illegible] speculation?

[W]here Our Money Goes.

[The R]aleigh News and Observer complains that the people of the south work hard, and pay all their money to the north. We are drained at every pore, says our contemporary. Of the six billion dollars received for our cotton in the past seventeen years we have saved only a paltry forty million dollars. We have paid out our billions for northern goods, and the bonded debt, interest, pensions and government taxation take one-third of our earnings.

Our contemporary calls this state of affairs the northern system. Why not call it the southern system? It is certainly our own fault if we do not raise our own supplies, and prefer northern goods to those of home manufacture. This is the only thing in the North Carolina editor's article that hurts, and it hurts because there is so much truth in it. We send our money to the north for hundreds of things that are just as cheap and just as well made here at home. This is one of our greatest economic mistakes, and we must reform the whole business.

But it is altogether wrong to say that the forty million dollars on deposit in our banks is all that we have saved in the past seventeen years. The other day we printed a summary of statistics showing for the past seven years alone an increase of forty-two per cent in the wealth of the south. What we have saved should not be computed in dollars and cents. There are other evidences of prosperity of more value. Our people in the main live better, dress better and are better educated than in former years. They surround themselves with more of the comforts and luxuries of life. They build more houses, and bigger and better ones. Their money is going into new towns, railroads and manufacturing enterprises. The people are keeping abreast of the times.

We are making progress, too, in another direction. We are now patronizing home manufactures to such an extent that the orders cannot be filled. This is one reason why so much of our money goes north. When our factories increase their facilities the larger circle of patrons thus accommodated will send less money away. The powerful motive of self-interest will finally settle this problem satisfactorily. When a Georgian sees that he can get his order promptly filled in Atlanta, and secure precisely the same article for the same money that it would cost in New York, less the extra freight, he is going to make Atlanta his market. We cannot bring about such a revolution in trade and industry in a day, but we are getting there, and going at a rapid pace. The man who looks at the south of ten years ago, and of the south of today, without seeing the tremendous results achieved must be a pessimist, and a blind one at that.

AT present writing one J. B. Foraker is ahead of John Sherman. Foraker's friends sit down on John Sherman's friends whenever they get a chance, and they get that chance frequently.

The Rev. W. A. Smith and His Work.

The Rev. W. A. Smith is the Methodist preacher in charge of the Etowah circuit in this state. He has a wife and five children. His salary is $200 a year. Having no horse, he walks his circuit, frequently trudging fifteen miles to fill an appointment. He studies his sermons while working in the corn-patch that supplements his scanty salary.

When Dr. Milburn wrote "The Rifle, Ax and Saddlebags," and Bishop Keener told of the privations of "The Post-Oak Circuit," they thought with the early days of Methodism the hardships therein described would pass away. But how happy would be the Rev. W. A. Smith if, in this enlightened day and in this stronghold of Methodism, his pilgrimage involved either the rifle, the ax or the saddlebags. His rifle is a hoe, and the free and inspiring swing of the ax is lost for him in the guiding of a bull-tongue plow. As for his saddlebags, if he uses them at all, he must carry them on his own shoulders. Without the adventure and inspiration of those early days, our latter-day preacher has all the drudgery, all the humiliating and grinding poverty—the pinched and narrowing circumstance that curbs the soul, dulls the emotions and takes the light and sparkle from the brain.

We wonder if the Rev. W. A. Smith, as he walks with stout heart through this humble itineracy, thinks of the men who roll to their pulpits in cushioned chariots, or of those luckier evangelists who in one collection, bag two or three thousand dollars? We hope not. There is nothing in the contemplation of those things that can edify or comfort the Rev. W. A. Smith. There may be, indeed, some lack of logic and of fair and even division that will perplex his soul and tire it, even as his feet are tired as he draws near to his little log church. Then let him think not on them, or vex his heart with their magnificence, any more than with the clouds that fly above his head or the sun that wheels above the clouds. Let him turn from them and the world they inhabit to the simple and loving people that await him in the "clearing." There is his work. There his lot is cast and there he must, with patient and uncomplaining hands, unravel the scanty threads of his life even unto the end. "Some must laugh while some must pray."

So, Rev. W. A. Smith, wherever you are, as, plodding your weary way you fill the round of your duty, our hat is lifted to you! Whether thou trudgest under broiling sun along dusty highways, and overlooking broad stretches of meadow cut with the molten silver of creek and river—or through deeps of the woods, odorous with the breath of summer; along the soft and pleasant road, across which the red-bird flashes as a bolt of scarlet—or, in the night-time adown long and silent lanes, hedged in by cherry tree or hickories, in whose branches the poultry huddle at rest; by barn-yards where cattle, ghost-like in the moonlight, stir uneasily at thy passing foot-steps; across purling brooks, dank and sunken in the pitchy blackness, but whispering thee to be of good cheer as they slip from beneath thy tired feet—wherever thou art, all honor to thy humble and earnest pilgrimage! Soft cushions and rolling carriages can bring thee no nearer to God than when thou walkest through His field and forest. No entreaty speed swifter or more surely to His great heart, though sent from carved and gilded temple, than the cry thou liftest up from thy rough-hewn pulpit in the woods. Thy Master sought His apostles from among the lowly fishermen who were casting their nets, and He will not turn away, when the gates of His kingdom are opened, from those whose path through earth was humble, and whose hearts for His sake endured silently and in obscurity.

MURAT HALSTEAD, who was very private during the war, is a bloody general in time of peace.

The Civil Service.

A correspondent, writing from Valley Town, North Carolina, seems to be opposed to civil service reform. He writes as follows:

In your answer to I. M. S., of Oak Ridge, La., you fail to say anything about the most important part of his communication concerning Cleveland's administration; that is, keeping republicans in office. I am not trying to criticise him, for I am not competent to do so, but there are a good many strong democrats in this part of North Carolina that are not pleased with his ideas of "civil service reform," and without he gets to believing that a democrat is as good as a republican or mugwump, and proves it by his actions, he may look to them for support in 1888, especially in this part of the country. I am a democrat, "dyed in the wool," and voted for Cleveland in '84, but I would as soon vote for a republican as a democrat who lets the republicans hold the offices when there are plenty of good democrats who are competent to fill them.

There is a good deal of misunderstanding in regard to civil service reform and also in regard to the president's appointments. There never has been what might be called a "clean sweep" in the offices since the beginning of the republic. The departments need the services of expert clerks, and there are now in office in Washington democrats who have held their places since the days of Franklin Pierce. Genuine civil service reform has therefore been in operation all the time, and it will continue in force as long as there are individuals who make themselves indispensable in the places they hold.

Mr. Cleveland has pushed his appointments much farther than the newspapers have given him credit for. As a matter of fact, he has made as many changes as any democratic president would have made. This should be borne in mind by those democrats who are influenced by the statements of the mugwumps to the effect that Mr. Cleveland has not removed many republicans from office.

THE war record of General Tuttle appears to consist exclusively in some confederate cotton speculations. Really, we are sorry for the bloody shirt warriors.

Governor Gordon and the Legislature.

We print an important interview with Governor Gordon this morning in which the governor touches upon certain matters he will bring before the legislature.

He disposes fully and sensibly of the sensation some persons have attempted to make about the repudiated bonds. The consideration of those bonds is barred by the constitution, and there is no more danger of the state being called on to pay them than to make good the issue of confederate money. The governor wants a board of pardons and he ought to have it. It is an open secret that the study of applications for pardon shortened the life of Mr. Stephens and that the nervous and mental strain produced thereby was the immediate cause of his death. With a penitentiary of fifteen hundred convicts, the governor cannot faithfully consider every application for pardon and discharge his other duties to the state. The governor also advises that the legislature shall take preliminary steps toward settling the future ownership or control of the State road. Indeed, his whole interview shows that he has carefully studied the needs of the state, that he has its business at his fingers' ends, and that he is making one of the most industrious and capable governors this commonwealth ever had.

THE Philadelphia Press is talking in a very friendly manner about fraternal intercourse between the sections. We are heartily glad of this, for the Press is hard to melt.

EDITORIAL POSTSCRIPT.

SENATOR DON CAMERON will celebrate the fourth of July by entertaining fifteen hundred poor children at his home near Washington.

BEFORE SAILING for Europe the other day Congressman Pat Collins, of Boston, predicted that Cleveland would carry Massachusetts in 1888.

NOW UTAH is clamoring to get into the union. Dakota, Washington, Montana and Wyoming are in the same fix. Alaska will be bothering us next.

THE LATEST explanation of the Tennessee cave with sixty human skeletons in it is that it is the private burial ground of the bloodthirsty M. Halstead.

BUFFALO BILL'S phenomenal success in England has enticed the Rev. John Jasper, of Richmond. He will demonstrate to the benighted Britishers that the "sun do move."

THOSE GOULDS are wonderful people. Little Eddie, who is not of age, walked down on Wall street the other day and made $100,000 before dinner, while his papa was skinning old Cyrus Field a few blocks away.

EX-CONGRESSMAN W. R. MORRISON despairs of any tariff reform by the fiftieth congress. We do not share Mr. Morrison's despair. One of our best hopes of some sensible tariff revision by the fiftieth congress is based on the fact that Mr. Morrison will not be a member of that body.

RECENT EXPERIMENTS with torpedo boats show that they are not reliable as a means of offensive naval warfare. The French have the fastest and largest fleet of these boats, and on a recent trial they were found to be unable to follow and find, much less to attack, a fleet of transports under convoy.

SECRETARY LAMAR, after the president's Guilford Miller letter, ordered the land grant railroads to show why they should not at once select the lands to which they are entitled and restore to settlement the great areas which are held up by them. The replies of the railroads show that they mean to hold on to the vast territory they now have in their grip until that grip is loosened by the omipotent hand of the law.

CHICAGO NEWS: "It is now urged that Secretary Lamar, being only sixty-two years old and but recently married, would not conduct himself with sufficient dignity if made a judge of the supreme court. Young men are generally coltish, but if Mr. Lamar should solemnly promise to behave with circumspection when on the bench he would probably keep his word."

THE HANGING of Albert Turner in Louisville last Friday was a remarkable instance of swift retribution. He brutally murdered Jennie Bowman two months and a half ago. The day after the murder he was captured and barely escaped the vengeance of a mob. He was indicted, tried and sentenced all in one hour and five minutes. The gallows seldom did better work than in his case.

WHEN ABRAM S. HEWITT was in congress he was very much annoyed by the howling dogs in the neighborhood of his Washington home. He appealed to the court to abate one especially noisy dog as a public nuisance, and an amusing lawsuit between the congressman and the dog's master was the consequence. Mr. Hewitt, as mayor of New York, continues his canine crusade. He wants the board of aldermen to abolish dogs in the metropolis.

THE EDITOR of the Kansas City Times does not love Senator Vest. He refers to the senator's "fine Italian hand," and then describes it more fully in these words: "It's a shapely hand, a little browned, it may be now, by western suns and western breezes; but deft as ever in the doing of such delicate deeds as the stiletto is fashioned mostly to do, and rare as ever in the plentitude of that exquisite political frankness which would take salt of his neighbor knee to knee at midnight and rise up to slay him, Joab-like, upon the morrow."

GENERAL JOE JOHNSTON is in San Francisco. A reporter tried to get him to say something about the battle flags incident, but the general told the young man that his business at present was to look after the government's interest in the Pacific railroads. The reporter retreated, but not in the admirable manner which characterized General Johnston's famous backward movements toward Atlanta in 1864.

THE YALE CLASS of 1837 was a remarkable one. It included a number of men who became famous. Among them were Senator Evarts, Chief Justice Waite, Edward Pierrepont, and ex-President Chapin, of Beloit. The average longevity of the class is remarkable. Of the one hundred and four men who graduated fifty years ago, forty still live. Nearly all these met at a class reunion and talked over their college days. They were a jolly set of old boys.

THE DUKE of Westminster is the richest man in England, if not in the world. He appears to be also one of the biggest liars. A few years ago he paid $10,500 for a portrait of Mr. Gladstone, by Millais. The other day he sold it, and in explanation he wrote "the grand old man" that he was compelled by his poverty to dispose of the portrait. The effete duke became offended at Gladstone because of his home rule attitude.

MAJOR CAMPBELL WALLACE.

A Vigorous Octogenarian—The Veteran Takes a Vacation.

Major Campbell Wallace will take a two months' vacation at that pleasant summer resort, Haywood, North Carolina.

The major's health is excellent, but he needs a rest, and he thinks that a summer in the mountains will be of great benefit to his wife and himself.

As Major Wallace briskly ascended the stairway in THE CONSTITUTION building yesterday, disdaining the aid of the elevator, those who saw him looked after him admiringly. It is not a common thing in this country to see a man in his eighty-second year in the full enjoyment of his faculties, walking with the confident swing of buoyant youth, and running up stairways without pausing for breath.

But Major Wallace is a remarkable man in more senses than one. His four score and odd years do not oppress him. He is always bright and cheerful. The topics that interest younger generations interest him. He does not live in the past. He is emphatically a man of today, gracefully anticipating and utilizing everything that has come to us with modern progress.

His mind is as active as ever, and his memory is tenacious. The rapidity with which he grasps and systematizes masses of details is the wonder of all railroad men. His life has been a busy one. Although he came from Tennessee, he has been so long identified with Georgia and her interests that he is generally regarded as a Georgian. The services rendered by him to the state when Governor Charles J. Jenkins placed him in charge of the Western and Atlantic railroad were important and valuable. He straightened out the tangles, reduced everything to a system, made the state's property a model railroad, and showed that it could be made to pay. His work for the past eight years in the railroad oommission speaks for itself. Throughout the length and breadth of the land he is qnoted as an authority on all subjects connected with railroad management. Sometimes THE CONSTITUTION and others have differed with him, but they have never failed to bear tribute to his crystal integrity and rare ability.

Everybody will wish the major and his wife a delightful vacation. This husband of eighty-two and this wife of seventy-five have been married fifty-seven years. They have enjoyed more than the average share of happiness, prosperity and such rich blessings as come in the shape of loving children and grandchildren, and legions of friends.

Business like to the last, and watchful of the interests confided to his care, Major Wallace has finished his report to the legislature, and made such arrangements as will enable him to take his vacation without causing inconvenience or embarrassment to the commission and those having dealings with it. With him the commission takes precedence of his personal interests. More than once since he has held his present position he has been offered high and responsible offices in other states that would have paid him $10,000 a year. He refused them all. He could not be tempted away from Georgia and the commission to which he has given much of the best work of his life.

Such men are appreciated in their own day and generation. In many a state there are bright young men growing up bearing the name of Campbell Wallace. When Christian fathers and mothers name their babies after a man it means something.

HIT AND MISS CHAT.

"There is not a public building in America," said General Phil Cook, "that cost twice the money of our state capitol that will present so handsome an appearance. Eight years of my ten years' service in congress was spent on the committee of public buildings of which I was chairman. I thereby became familiar with this subject, and the Georgia capitol is a handsomer and a better building at a cost of one million dollars than any two million dollar capitol or public building in the country."

A great deal has been said about the importation of oolitic limestone to build our capitol. The limestone cost less than fifty thousand dollars and makes the best possible buildig stone. Georgia is not provincial in selecting a stone from another state. We send back to one city in Ohio six hundred thousand dollars worth of granite to be delivered within six months, and sold Columbus, Ohio, a hundred and thirty thousand dollars worth of Stone Mountain granite this year. This balances the account of imported stone and leaves us seven hundred thousand dollars ahead.

Few people comprehend the magnitude of the business of the Stone Mountain Granite company. They are now filling a contract for six hundred thousand dollars worth of blocks for Cincinnati alone. This contract is to be filled in six months and from fifteen to forty carloads of granite blocks leave Atlanta every day for Cincinnati. The freight bills of the company average a thousand dollars a day and the pay roll ranges from five thousand to seven thousand dollars per week. The quality of the granite improves the deeper it is quarried. The sales of the company will reach one million dollars this year and its business is oonstantly increasing.

"The farmers around Leesburg," said General Phil Cook, "have realized in cash over ten thousand dollars from the sales of watermelons this season. This is net to them above the freights and commissions. It has been a God-send to the people. When I left home the demand was still active, and prices at such psteh as gave the farmers a fine margin."

The first time Senator Hill used eyeglasses, or spectacles, was while he was making his famous Amnesty speech in congress. While speaking he took up a book to read an extract. The room was poorly lighted, and he found it impossible to catch the fine print. Mr. Morrison, who was sitting near by, handed him a pair of spectacles. Mr. Hill adjusted them, and, with a smile, said: "I suppose I will have to come to it." That evening he bought a pair of eyeglasses and used them to the day of his death. He was fifty-three years old when he made the Amnesty speech.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Bull Fighting.

EDITORS CONSTITUTION: Where did the amusement of bull fighting originate? T. T.

The Moors, who in various ways left the impress of their nationality upon the Spaniards, bequeathed to them also bull fighting as a sport. It was made the culminating spectacle at public fetes, and became essentially a Spanish pastime, following the countrymen of the cid in their migrations to crown their festivities. It obtained firm hold on public taste in Mexico, and, though still an event that stirs the chivalric blood of the dons and hidalgos, its glory is waning, however, before the progress of humane ideas,

Mayor Cooper and the Salvation Army.

What right has Mayor Cooper to prohibit the Salvation Army procession? What right has he to prohibit any man or set of men from marching along the public streets? What right has he to condemn the practice of the Salvation Army people? The law of the land controls the actions of men. It prescribes how far they shall go. Have these people violated the law? If so, what law? If they are violators of law punish them for it. As I see it, the mayor's order is usurption of the most dangerous character. It prohibits the free exercises of constitutional rights in religious matters and condemns a multitude without a hearing in court. I am not connected with the Salvation Army. O. P.

The Use of Copper Cents.

EDITORS CONSTITUTION: I have lived where copper cents are used as currency, and I like that way of doing business. There is an absolute injustice in our refusal to use them. Every article on sale has its value, and it is unjust to have any usage in business which compels a purchaser to pay for an article more than it is worth. If I have a marketable article worth two cents, there is no more justice in my saying that I will take nothing less than a nickel for it, because I do not wish to handle coppers, than there would be in my saying that I will not take less than five dollars for an article the value of which is two dollars, for the reason that I do not wish to handle any currency of denomination less than five dollars. Yes, it is justice, it is business, it is sense to let the copper cents come into circulation, and when people get articles worth two cents, let them have it at its value, and not compel them to pay two and a half-times its value, in order to obtain it. SENSE.

The Mayor and Light.

EDITOR CONSTITUTION: Our worthy mayor does not regard the scriptural injunction, to "Let your light so shine before men," etc., etc., as binding on him, when applied to anybody else's light, hence he declines to let Captain Brucker display her Light on the 4th. This action of the mayor is not to be construed as a condemnation of his honor, or that he loves the darkness rather than Light, because his deeds are evil, nor that he objects to Light, but that he fetters the shine part, or rather the shines; and also that he does not wish to cast any reflections on the sable adorrings of the ice cream, lemonade and watermelon stands, around which our patriotic freedmen testify their devotion to the day in gastronomic feats unequalled in the annals of republics. This day being theirs by right of discovery, there should be no cumbering of the ground by other nationalities, organizations of whatsoever race, color or previous condition, hence Captain Brucker must hide her Light under a bushel and await a more suitable occasion for illuminating the dark places ONE WHO FAVORS LIGHT.

Big Buildings.

EDITORS CONSTITUTION: Please name some of the buildings of the world having the largest seating capacity. J. T. H.

Leaving out Sydenham palace at London and the basilica of St. Peters at Rome, which is not provided with seating accommodations to any extent, probably the most capacious structure in the world, as well as in the United States, is the Wigwam, at Chicago, which was erected for political purposes. It is said that 20,000 persons can assemble within its walls. Agricultural hall, London, has been temporarily made to accommodate a greater number than Albert Hall, which possesses such perfect acoustical properties that in any part of the hall the music of the grand concerts that are given there can be heard with distinctness and without confusion of sound. A prominent architect of this city says Albert hall will seat 10,000 or 12,000 people. The structure cost 20,000 pounds sterling, and has what is said to be the largest organ in the world. Of theaters, the Alhambra, London, and Scala, Milan, will each seat 5,000; the Standard and Drury Lane, London, will seat respectively 4,800 and 4,000.

The Young Tragedian

From Life.

The Young Tra-ge-dian—That closley shaven gentleman, children, is a Young and Gifted Tra-ge-dian. How erect is his Car'ri-age, is it not? Observe with what hauteur he flings a Coin to the son of Italy who has just pol-ish-ed his boots. He is in Funds just now and he has the Big Head. Next week he is to go on the Road at the Head of a Summer Snap. He im-ag-ines that the country is a-waiting his ap-pear-ance as a Star in Breathless Suspense, and that he is Going to make Big Money. In about a month he will be Back in the city ex-plain-ing that his failure was Due to beastly Bad man-age-ment. Must it not be Nice to be a Gifted Young Tra-ge-dian?

The Reason Why.

From the New York Herald.

Of the so-called brilliant young men who are turning out two or three literary masterpieces every year, how many of them have produced anything that will live? The present generation has produced no Disraeli, with his "Vivian Gray;" no Macaulay, with his essay on "Milton;" no Byron, with his fiery, passionate, eloquent verse.—Atlanta Constitution.

When Disraeli and Macaulay and Byron wrote as described there was virtually no newspaper press. Such journals as the Morning Chronicle or Leigh Hunt's Examiner were perhaps the chief representatives of the magnificent array of today. The press now absorbs the talent that once found expression elsewhere. By this the individual may suffer, but the world is the gainer.

Queer Freak of Insomnia.

From the New York Independent.

To illustrate the alleged sleepiness of a certain college town the following story is told: A certain professor, who made the unusual complaint of insomnia, was advised to consult a New York physician. He did so, and the latter after a most thorough examination of heart, lungs and all the vital organs, pronounced the professor absolutely sound. "I am at a loss," the doctor said, "to account for it. You seem perfectly well. Perhaps something is preying upon your mind?" "Oh no," said the professor, "nothing at all." "Perhaps you have some business cares?" "No; nothing of that sort." "And yet you say that you get no sleep at night?" "Oh, no! I never said that. I'm all right at night; but its insomnia in the daytime that bothers me!"

Civilization Among the Redskins.

From the Salt River Valley News.

As an evidence of what civilization is doing for the Indians, we noticed last Wednesday, in one of our stores, the purchase of an immense wire bustle by a young and giddy Pima squaw. She was quite particular, and finally selected one of the wire arrangements with blue trimmings.

The Advantages of An Education.

From the Philadelphia Record.

Had Craig Tolliver been educated it is probable that his lawless and criminal energies would have found vent in such a transaction as that of the Fidelity bank, of Cincinnati, or in bribing a board of New York aldermen, or in wrecking a railroad corporation.

IN SMALL DOSES.

Toledo Bee: "Don't get excited."

Omaha Bee: "The order has gone forth that the English sparrow must go."

Memphis Avalanche: "Watermelons are dear, but doctors are dearer."

Philadelphia Inquirer: "Give the Russian bear rope enough and he'll boss the whole menagerie."

New York Post: It seems that Captain Jack Hussey was the victim of Officer Hahn's outraged sense of the proprieties. Grand street etiquette requires that when two men are drinking together, the one who fills his glass first shall wait for the other. Hussey drank his liquor before Hahn's was ready, and Hahn resented it by shooting him. This sounds like a story from the other side of the Rocky mountains.

Detroit Tribune: The negro is advancing. A "colored" summer resort is being built in Virginia.

N. Y. Advertiser: In a recent English book on "School Hygiene," Dr. Alfred Carpenter is away behind time. He would have schools built on "virgin earth;" that is, on earth that has not been disturbed within historic times. He will find no such earth in England. Moreover, he believes in flogging the pupils as a counter-irritant to badness, and he explains that "there is no danger in stripes with a cane on the lower part of the back."

Galveston News; Rifle whisky kills quick according to the prohibition papers; but New England rum is very slow poison. An exchange says:

"The oldest man in New England is Chesley Heal, of Searsmont, Me., who is 107 years old. It is recorded that he has chewed tobacco for 100 years and drank New England rum for nearly as long a time; that he voted for Jefferson the first time he was a presidential candidate, and has been a democrat from that day to this."

Chicago News: A Mr. Kirkpatrick, who lives near Ladonia, Tex., is somewhat behind with his crops, and on going to the field the other morning he found the following sympathetic poem tacked to a stake in his corn patch:

"Jesus, my all to heaven is gone,
I believe the grass has got Kirk's corn.
Strike and I'll pursue,
I believe it's got his cotton too."

Cincinnati Telegram: "Do you rectify mistakes here?" asked a gentleman, as he stepped into a drug store.

"Yes, sir, we do, if the patient is still alive," replied the urbane clerk.

New York Tribune: Says a Galveston business man: "The prohibition question has given rise to more discussion in Texas than any issue ever brought before the people. Those in favor of prohibition live principally in the thickly populated counties in the northern portion of the state, Dallas and Fort Worth being the prohibition strongholds, while Galveston, San Antonio and El Paso are opposed to it. Both sides are making a vigorous campaign, and vast quantities of printed matter for and against the amendment are distributed throughout the state. The anti-prohibitionists publish an illustrated paper in Dallas at the cost of $2,000 per month, and 20,000 copies are distributed each issue. It is generally reported in Texas that the brewers and liquor men of St. Louis have sent large sums of money into the state to be used during the campaign, and the prohibitionists are equally liberal in expending money, so that the election will be stubbornly contested on both sides, and the race will be very close. Most of the leading business men of Texas are opposed to prohibition, but it is said that fully two-thirds of the newspapers in the state are in favor of it, and many leading men are fighting on that side."

COMING TO THE FAIR.

Counties Arranging Exhibits for Piedmont Exposition.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE PRESIDENT.

Polk County to Build a House Out of Pig Iron—Bartow County to Hold a Meeting—Work at the Park.

It is ninety-nine days from this morning, including sundays, until the gates of the Piedmont exposition are opened to the public.

At last the plan of the exposition is practically agreed on. The buildings will be grouped around the lower end of the track. The grand stand will be located near the main entrance next to the city, just before the home stretch in the track. Just below the grand stand will begin the stalls for cattle, sheep, goats and hogs. These will be arranged four rows deep and will comprise over four hundred separate stalls. Every tenth stall will be of unusual size, so as to accommodate extra fine or dangerous animals. To the left of these stalls the poultry show will be located, comprising two thousand coops. To the right of the cattle show will be the racing stables. Just beyond the end of the cattle stalls will be the entrance to agricultural and machinery hall, which will be set at right angles to the main building. The agricultural and machinery hall will be 650 feet in length. At the end of this hall will be the entrance of the main exposition building, which will be seven hundred feet long. A visitor can enter the further end of the main exposition building and walk through a solid half mile of displays, ranging from the finest oil paintings to a herd of cattle, and find himself at the end of the show in the grand stand where he can watch the races. From the upper end of the grand stand to the upper end of the main exposition building, which stands almost parallel with it at the opposite end of the great semi-circle, the distance is over half a mile. There will hardly be fifty feet of this distance that is not covered by a part of the exhibits of the exposition.

THE OUTLOOK FOR RACING.

Judge H. W. Hopkins, who has been through the western racing circuits in behalf of the races, writes from Chicago, under date of 29th: "You need have no fear about the racing. We will have all the horses that can be accommodated on the track and some of the very best in the west. The entries will be by far the best ever made at a meeting south of Kentucky. This is assured beyond doubt. Mr. Bud Doble will be on hand with some of the best horses in the country. I find special interest among horsemen in the racing developments in the south, and especially in the Atlanta exposition. They will be on hand in force."

Judge Hopkins returns to Thomasville for a few days, when he will go east in the interest of the exposition, and secure some of the favorites of the eastern circuits for our turf. The track will be completed in less than two weeks, and will at once be rolled and packed, and opened to the public.

MR. J. P. JONES OFF FOR THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. John Paul Jones will leave Atlanta Monday morning on an extended trip through the north and northwest in the interest of the exposition. His first work will be to secure special rates from the railroads running from the lakes to Atlanta. He will then appoint agents in the various northwestern cities and towns to organize excursions to the exposition. He is now arranging appointments to address public meetings or boards of trade in a score of towns and cities in behalf of the exposition. He has a full list of printed matter detailing the advantages of the Piedmont region and the outlook for the Piedmont exposition. The greatest interest has been manifested throughout the northwest, and he is confident that thousands of visitors will be attracted to Atlanta.

Arrangements for the President's Trip.

Arrangements are being perfected to make the visit of President Cleveland to the Exposition a significant and glorious occasion. It is proposed to bring him and his party in a special train of four cars. An invitation has been sent to Governor Lee, of Virginia, asking that he meet the presidential party with his full staff at the Virginia line, as the train starts from Washington, and escort it to the North Carolina line, where the Governor of North Carolina with his staff will be waiting to receive it and to give the president escort through the old north state to the South Carolina line, where Governor Richardson and his staff will be awaiting the party. At the Georgia line Governor Gordon and his staff will meet the party and escort them to Atlanta.

It is hoped that each of these governors, with their staffs, will come to Atlanta and remain with the president during the exposition. It is probable that by the time the presidential train reaches Atlanta it will consist of six or eight cars, and will have the president, some members of the cabinet and four or five governors. The arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the president while in Atlanta are now being discussed, and will soon be developed. It is sufficient to say that they will be entirely worthy of the occasion of the first visit of a democratic president to the best city in the south and the central city of the Piedmont region.

Exposition Notes.

Special premium by W. J. Wood, the stovier, 87 Whitehall—One handsome baby carriage to the prettiest baby under one year old. Open to the world. To be decided by photographs only. Photographs to become the property of W. J. Wood. Open to both boys and girls.

Special premium by W. J. Wood, the stovier, 87 Whitehall—One elegant nickel-plated Altoona range for the best loaf of bread baked by a young lady under eighteen years of age.

CEDARTOWN, Ga., July 2.—Mr. A. T. Wes[t] is combining with the people to make a tremendou[s] exhibit at the Piedmont fair. They will have a house of pig iron, supported by marble pillars, and covered with slate from Polk county.

CARTERSVILLE, Ga., July 2.—A meeting of the people of Bartow county has been called for the purpose of getting up an exhibit for the Piedmont fair. Dr. Felton is heartily enlisted in the movement.

FORSYTH, Ga., July 2.—I have talked with many of the good people of Monroe county about the Piedmont exposition, and find them awake to its advantages. Messrs. McGinty and Cabaniss, the able editors of the Monroe Advertiser, have put their shoulders to the wheel, and will do all in their power to have their county represented at the Piedmont exposition and state fair. This is wise policy. Old Monroe is one of the best counties in the state, and by making her exhibit at both fairs she will get double advantage and attract many visitors and immigrants into her limits. You may count on a good report from Monroe. T. B. W.

Selling His Wife for Six Hundred Dollars.

New Philadelphia (Ohio) Telegram to the Pittsburg Dispatch.

About two years ago a prominent young man of Lockport, a small place half a mile south of here, married a pretty young lady of this place. A neighbor, a young fellow of considerable property, often noticed the charming woman next door, and the oftener he saw her the more he liked her. Matters stopped not here. The amorous neighbor went a step further and fell in love. It is presumed that the pretty wife was not averse to admiration and threw out some encouragement to her hopeless lover. At any rate said hopeless suitor finally summed up courage to approach the husband and offer him $600 for his wife.

At first the offer was scorned; then it was considered and at last embraced. Wives were to be had for the asking, but $600 was accumulated only after long and ardent woonting. So the transfer was made amid mutual congratulations. The lucky man—or unlucky, as the case may be—immediately took precautions against any remorse on the part of the self-made widower, and carried his $600 wife to the far west. The husband now regrets his action and is trying to get his spouse back again.

All in Vain.

As a desolate bird that through darkness its lost way is winging,
As a hand that is helplessly raised when Death's
sickle is swinging,
So is life! Aye, the life that lends passion and breath to my singing.

As a nightingale's song that is full of a sweetness
unspoken,
As a spirit unbarring the gates of the skies for a token,
So is love! Aye, the love that shall fall when his pinion is broken.

As the tramp of the legion when trumpets their challenge are sending,
As the shouts of the storm-god when lightnings the black sky are rending,
So is power! Aye, the power that shall lie in the dust at its ending.

So short is our life; yet with space for all things to forsake us,
A bitter delusion, a dream from which naught can awake us,
Till Death's dogging footsteps at morn or at eve shall o'ertake us.

THE REPUDIATED BONDS ALLUDE[D]

The Sale of the State Road Oppose[d]—Condition of the Jails—The Bra[nch] Colleges of the Universities.

General Gordon, at the request of a [CON]STITUTION representative, gives our re[aders a] summary of the important points he wi[ll pre]sent to the legislature at its summer s[ession] which begins on next Wednesday. It [is] seen that he cuts out considerable wo[rk for] that body, and it is not impossible that [the ses]sion may be prolonged until the 10th of [Octo]ber, in which event the Piedmont exp[osition] will manage to take care of the memb[ers for] two weeks of jubilee. The following [is the] interview with General Gordon:

"General, do you propose to send a m[essage] to the legislature?"

"I presume I shall, although I hav[e not] written a line of it. I am not required [to do] so by any law, or precedent, but there ar[e] matters of great interest to which I th[ink it] advisable to call the attention of the l[egisla]ture."

"What are some of these matters of [inter]est?"

"Well, in the first place, the subject to [which] I have already alluded in a former inte[rview] is one of importance, namely: a boa[rd of] pardons. I stated before my opinion, th[at the] executive ought to be relieved of that r[espon]sibility and the prisoners ought to hav[e the] benefit of a more prompt hearing. I sha[ll ask] the legislature to consider that matter ca[reful]ly. To demonstrate the avisability of [such a] board, it is not necessary to suppose tha[t all] or even a large proportion of the hundre[ds of] applications are made and supported by re[spon]sible citizens from the communities in [which] the prisoners formerly resided, in many [cases] by officials of the county, or officers o[f the] court in which they were tried. To sa[y the] least of it, these cases are entitled to a re[spect]ful and considerate hearing. The state [is] much bound morally to consider the ap[plica]tions for pardon, when based upon reaso[nable] grounds, as it is bound to grant a fair tr[ial to] the accused. It is physically impossib[le for] the governor to discharge the onerous d[uties] devolving upon him, and at the same [time] consider all these applications, or even a [large] proportion of them.

"Another matter of public interest to w[hich] I think the attention of the legislature [ought] to be invited is the State road. The pr[esent] lease, it is true, does not expire until afte[r the] meeting of the next legislature, but so sh[ort a] time will intervene after that legislatu[re as]sembles prior to the expiration of the [lease] that it will be difficult to wisely dispose o[f the] road or find proper lessees upon advanta[geous] terms. I think, therefore, that the pr[esent] legislature ought to consider the question[s of] what disposition it will make of the road [and] at the same time to discuss very full[y the] methods to be adopted for the future. A[s you] are aware, my own convictions are tha[t the] State road ought not to be sold. The re[asons] which have forced me to this conclusion [were] fully discussed in the late campaigns an[d I do] not, therefore, think it necessary to elab[orate] them in my message. All I shall seek to [do is] to call the attention of the legislature [to the] short time that will intervene betwe[en the] next session of the legislature and th[e ex]piration of the lease, and the necessity [there]fore, of considering in advance what di[sposi]tion will be made of it.

"I may also have something to say [in my] message in reference to the penitentia[ry sys]tem and our jails. In reference to the l[atter] it seems to me important that some plan s[hould] be adopted by the legislature to secure g[reater] care in the ventilation and cleanliness o[f the] jails, in order to protect the health o[f the] prisoners."

"I may also have something to say in [refer]ence to the state university, and the state [col]leges. I have recently visited two of the[se] colleges, at Dahlonega and Milledgeville, and [was] very much regretted that I could not go [to] Thomasville. I was deeply interested, a[nd] am satisfied that these state colleges are [doing] a great and good work, and supplying a [want] which has been long felt. That want is h[igher] education at very low cost. Our sou[thern] boys are poor, and they ought to secu[re the] benefits of such education with the li[mited] means at their command."

"Are you going to have anything to s[ay in] reference to the report of the board of vi[sitors] regarding the Atlanta university?"

"I probably shall. The question subm[itted] by the board of visitors as to co-educatio[n of] the races at the Atlanta university shou[ld be] discussed with an earnest desire to reac[h the] truth and a fixed purpose to do whatever [will] best promote the interest of both races. [It is] not a question of $8,000. We are boun[d by] every consideration of good faith and of h[onor] to furnish that sum each year for special [edu]cation of the colored race. The state wou[ld do] this if there was no contract about it. [The] only question, therefore, which could ari[se is,] How shall that $8,000 be used to best [pro]mote the end in view? I presume if the [leg]islature saw fit to do so it could appro[priate] that $8,000 to a colored college taught w[holly] by colored teachers and presided over by [a col]ored president.

"Speaking of the board of visitors, I [have] had it in mind to call the attention o[f the] legislature particularly to the law under w[hich] this board is appointed. The act pro[vides] that the board shall 'attend the universi[ty ex]amination.' To thus attend the examina[tions] and report to the governor seems to be the [only] duty required of this board by the law. [My] deliberate opinion, after careful consider[ation] is that this board of visitors ought either [to be] abolished, or their powers greatly enla[rged.] What is it worth to the state to have th[ese gen]tlemen go and sit in the examination [rooms] for a few days and hear these boys r[ecite?] The state is expending from $700 to $1,2[00 per] annum for this work which seems to be [abso]lutely useless. If the powers of the [board] were enlarged so that they could look in[to the] police regulations, the discipline, th[e cost] of living, the course of study, i[n short] into everything that appertains to the w[ork]ing of the university, the amount whic[h is] costing the state would be doubtless we[ll ex]pended; but I repeat, that to pay gentl[emen] however intelligent and capable, and ma[ke] their duty simply to sit and listen to recit[ations] for a few hours, seems to me money abso[lutely] thrown away. Nor would this enlargeme[nt of] the duties of this board of visitors interfe[re in] any way with the duties of the board of [trus]tees. Such board might become a very i[mpor]tant adjunct to the board of trustees. [If a] sufficient amount of money to cover thei[r ex]penses during their absence from their h[omes] this board of visitors, if clothed with the p[roper] powers, and constituted as it is of men of a[bility] and high character, might furnish facts [and] make recommendations of decided va[lue to] the institution, and to all of our institutio[ns of] learning."

"Are there any other matters, gener[al,] which you will make allusion in your me[ssage] to the legislature?"

"Oh, yes, quite a number of others, b[ut I] don't care to talk of them now. I may [have] something to say about land titles, and t[he ne]cessity of the legislature taking action in [order] to prevent land frauds, and in order to [quiet] titles in the state."

"Are you going to have anything to [say in] reference to what are known as the repu[diated] bonds?"

"Possibly I may, though I scarcely fee[l that] there is any necessity for reference to [it.] Some little uneasiness, I believe, has bee[n felt] in some portions of the state upon tha[t sub]ject, but if the question was better unde[rstood] there could be no grounds for such appr[ehen]sion. The payment of these bonds is forb[idden] in the fundamental law of the state, and [there] is no possibility of their payment with[out a] change in the constitution. Of course, [there]fore, all the talk about their payment is [either] a willful effort to mislead the uninform[ed, or] else the dictation of parties who are ignor[ant of] the barrier which the state has erected a[gainst] such payment. Why, sir, think of the a[bsurd]ity of such apprehension or pretense of [appre]hension. In the first place, after the [full] and most careful investigation, these [bonds] were declared illegal, null and void b[y the] legislature; then there were constitu[tional] amendments ratified by the people in [1877]; then the convention of the [people] which met in July thereafter in[corpo]rated into the new constitution

THE COMING MESSAGE.

Governor Gordon Outlines Its Leading Points.

THE REPUDIATED BONDS ALLUDED TO.

The Sale of the State Road Opposed—The Condition of the Jails—The Branch Colleges of the Universities.

General Gordon, at the request of a CONSTITUTION representative, gives our readers a summary of the important points he will present to the legislature at its summer session, which begins on next Wednesday. It will be seen that he cuts out considerable work for that body, and it is not impossible that its session may be prolonged until the 10th of October, in which event the Piedmont exposition will manage to take care of the members for two weeks of jubilee. The following is the interview with General Gordon:

"General, do you propose to send a message to the legislature?"

"I presume I shall, although I have not written a line of it. I am not required to do so by any law, or precedent, but there are some matters of great interest to which I think it advisable to call the attention of the legislature."

"What are some of these matters of interest?"

"Well, in the first place, the subject to which I have already alluded in a former interview is one of importance, namely: a board of pardons. I stated before my opinion, that the executive ought to be relieved of that responsibility and the prisoners ought to have the benefit of a more prompt hearing. I shall ask the legislature to consider that matter carefully. To demonstrate the avisability of such board, it is not necessary to suppose that all, or even a large proportion of the hundreds of applications are made and supported by responsible citizens from the communities in which the prisoners formerly resided, in many cases by officials of the county, or officers of the court in which they were tried. To say the least of it, these cases are entitled to a respectful and considerate hearing. The state is as much bound morally to consider the applications for pardon, when based upon reasonable grounds, as it is bound to grant a fair trial to the accused. It is physically impossible for the governor to discharge the onerous duties devolving upon him, and at the same time consider all these applications, or even a large proportion of them.

"Another matter of public interest to which I think the attention of the legislature ought to be invited is the State road. The present lease, it is true, does not expire until after the meeting of the next legislature, but so short a time will intervene after that legislature assembles prior to the expiration of the lease that it will be difficult to wisely dispose of the road or find proper lessees upon advantageous terms. I think, therefore, that the present legislature ought to consider the question as to what disposition it will make of the road, and at the same time to discuss very fully the methods to be adopted for the future. As you are aware, my own convictions are that the State road ought not to be sold. The reasons which have forced me to this conclusion were fully discussed in the late campaigns and I do not, therefore, think it necessary to elaborate them in my message. All I shall seek to do is to call the attention of the legislature to the short time that will intervene between the next session of the legislature and the expiration of the lease, and the necessity, therefore, of considering in advance what disposition will be made of it.

"I may also have something to say in my message in reference to the penitentiary system and our jails. In reference to the latter, it seems to me important that some plan should be adopted by the legislature to secure greater care in the ventilation and cleanliness of our jails, in order to protect the health of the prisoners.

"I may also have something to say in reference to the state university, and the state colleges. I have recently visited two of these colleges, at Dahlonega and Milledgeville, and very much regretted that I could not go to Thomasville. I was deeply interested, and I am satisfied that these state colleges are doing a great and good work, and supplying a want which has been long felt. That want is higher education at very low cost. Our southern boys are poor, and they ought to secure the benefits of such education with the limited means at their command."

"Are you going to have anything to say in reference to the report of the board of visitors regarding the Atlanta university?"

"I probably shall. The question submitted by the board of visitors as to co-education of the races at the Atlanta university should be discussed with an earnest desire to reach the truth and a fixed purpose to do whatever will best promote the interest of both races. It is not a question of $8,000. We are bound by every consideration of good faith and of honor to furnish that sum each year for special education of the colored race. The state would do this if there was no contract about it. The only question, therefore, which could arise is, How shall that $8,000 be used to best promote the end in view? I presume if the legislature saw fit to do so it could appropriate that $8,000 to a colored college taught wholly by colored teachers and presided over by a colored president.

"Speaking of the board of visitors, I have had it in mind to call the attention of the legislature particularly to the law under which this board is appointed. The act provides that the board shall 'attend the university examination.' To thus attend the examinations, and report to the governor seems to be the only duty required of this board by the law. My deliberate opinion, after careful consideration, is that this board of visitors ought either to be abolished, or their powers greatly enlarged. What is it worth to the state to have the gentlemen go and sit in the examination rooms for a few days and hear these boys recite? The state is expending from $700 to $1,200 per annum for this work which seems to be absolutely useless. If the powers of the board were enlarged so that they could look into the police regulations, the discipline, the cost of living, the course of study, indeed into everything that appertains to the well being of the university, the amount which it is costing the state would be doubtless well expended; but I repeat, that to pay gentlemen, however intelligent and capable, and make it their duty simply to sit and listen to recitations for a few hours, seems to me money absolutely thrown away. Nor would this enlargement of the duties of this board of visitors interfere in any way with the duties of the board of trustees. Such board might become a very important adjunct to the board of trustees. Paid a sufficient amount of money to cover their expenses during their absence from their homes, this board of visitors, if clothed with the proper powers, and constituted as it is of men of ability and high character, might furnish facts, and make recommendations of decided value to the institution, and to all of our institutions of learning."

"Are there any other matters, general, to which you will make allusion in your message to the legislature?"

"Oh, yes, quite a number of others, but I don't care to talk of them now. I may have something to say about land titles, and the necessity of the legislature taking action in order to prevent land frauds, and in order to quiet titles in the state."

"Are you going to have anything to say in reference to what are known as the repudiated bonds?"

"Possibly I may, though I scarcely feel that there is any necessity for reference to them. Some little uneasiness, I believe, has been felt in some portions of the state upon that subject, but if the question was better understood there could be no grounds for such apprehension. The payment of these bonds is forbidden in the fundamental law of the state, and there is no possibility of their payment without a change in the constitution. Of course, therefore, all the talk about their payment is either a willful effort to mislead the uninformed, or else the dictation of parties who are ignorant of the barrier which the state has erected against such payment. Why, sir, think of the absurdity of such apprehension or pretense of apprehension. In the first place, after the fullest and most careful investigation, these bonds were declared illegal, null and void by the legislature; then there were constitutional amendments ratified by the people in May, 1887; then the convention of the people which met in July thereafter incorporated into the new constitution that these bonds should not be paid. They were placed on the same footing as the confederate or war debt; and the constitution positively forbids that the legislature shall pass any law or the governor make any contract to make the state a party to any suit on account of these bonds. This constitution was also submitted to the people and ratified in December, 1877. Here then is a sort of triple Chinese wall erected around the state treasury. It is therefore the silliest nonsense, or something worse, to attempt to excite the people with grave apprehensions on such a question."

A BRACE OF FAMOUS PISTOLS.

The Owner of Colonel Hayne's Dueling Pistols in Atlanta.

Mr. Charles C. Manning, of Little Rock, Arkansas, is in Atlanta, on a short visit.

Yesterday afternoon he showed a CONSTITUTION reporter a brace of dueling pistols which were formerly the property of Colonel Hayne, of South Carolina. These weapons are of the regulation size, possessing a very large bore, and the handles and barrels are devoid of ornamentation. They are kept in a silver-lined case made of rosewood. The owner values the pistols highly.

"It is not likely," remarked Mr. Manning, "that these deadly weapons will ever again figure on the field of honor. They have been used in a number of fatal encounters in South Carolina, Mississippi and Texas. I cannot tell you much about these duels. I know, however, that the pistols have repeatedly been in the hands of famous advocates of the code, and that they have done their work thoroughly. I was once a principal in an affair of honor in my own state. I was the challenged party and selected pistols, for I was then an expert pistol shot. The affair was adjusted before the field was reached. Had we fought I would have used these pistols, but I am glad to say I have never had occasion to use them, and I hope I never shall."

Mr. Manning is not an advocate of the code duello and deprecates the practice of dueling. He said on this subject: "I believe that dueling is dead. I doubt whether another duel will ever again be fought in the south. At its best it was an absurd custom, and I am glad it is becoming obsolete."

"What will take the place of dueling as a method of settling difficulties between gentlemen?"

"I cannot say, but anything is better than the duel."

Mr. Manning stated that Colonel Rogers, of New Mexico, offered him $150 for the pistols, which offer was refused.

THE BARRETT ASSAULT.

The Police Arrest Three More Men Who are Supposed to be Wild Cats.

The assault made upon Mr. Zeph Barrett, night before last on Marietta street, near Bartow was thoroughly investigated by the police department yesterday and the investigation resulted in several arrests.

It appears that Mr. Barrett has been molested several times by a gang of young men who are supposed to be the Wild Cats, but as Mr. Barrett knew them all personally he was not harassed after the recognition. On Friday morning, when the gang assaulted him, Mr. Barrett paid no further attention to it than to speak to some one whom he recognized. This, however, did not check the assault and in a few seconds Mr. Barrett found himself in a desperate struggle, the details of which were printed in yesterday's CONSTITUTION.

Early yesterday morning Acting Chief Couch instructed the department to give the matter a careful investigation and by noon Will McGrath, G. H. Connally and W. N. O'Shields had been arrested because officers had sufficient evidence against them. The cases will be tried on the 6th inst.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

Items of Interest Picked Up by The Constitution Reporters.

Young George Hillyer is still very low.

The indications point to a quiet fourth of July.

The Young Men's Library association hall will be closed on Monday, that being the national holiday.

A. Daus, the wine room man, on Alabama street, was booked yesterday for violating the prohibition law.

A small party of Atlanta people went to Cumberland island yesterday at 6 o'clock to spend a few days at this seaside resort.

There will be a grand opening ball at Catoosa springs Thursday night, July 7. Reduced rates on Western and Atlantic railroad.

The brick work on Trinity church will be complete in about two weeks. This, when finished, will be a remarkably handsome church.

Preston Rainey, the crippled negro, who spends two-thirds of his time in the stockade, was locked up again last night for disorderly conduct.

Adam Cloud was arrested yesterday upon a warrant charging him with cheating and swindling. The warrant was sworn out by King, the negro merchant on Peters street.

A large number of ladies passed through the city yesterday, on their way to Rome, to attend the annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society, of the North Georgia conference.

The citizens of the fourth ward are requested to meet at Grace church Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock, to take action looking to the location of a public school in that ward. The fourth ward has no public school.

A few minutes before midnight a bright light was noticed on the south side of the city. Investigation showed that some building, situated several miles beyond the city limits, was burning, but no particulars could be obtained.

The national holiday is to be turned into a great prohibition rally in Rome, tomorrow. Speeches are to be delivered by Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, Senator Morgan, Dr. J. W. Lee, Senator Colquitt and Dr. W. H. Felton. An immense crowd is expected to be present.

In the notice of the new firm yesterday Mr. T. B. Brady's name was by mistake made I. B. Brady. Mr. Brady has long been closely identified with the livery business of the city and will continue business at the old place. The new firm is Brady & Miller.

The Atlanta and West Point road will run an excursion train to the city on Monday. A large crowd of people is expected to arrive on that train, and many others will take advantage of the low rates offered by the different railroads, to spend the 4th in the city.

The directors of the Capital City bank met yesterday and authorized the building committee to proceed at once to arrange for the building of the vaults and other fixtures. The styles of furniture have been approved and the committee was ordered to ask for bids. The style of safe has not been determined upon, but it will have all the modern improvements.

Mrs. Lucy Maddox, the estimable wife of the highly esteemed Judge James L. Maddox, of Flovilla, Ga., has a bed quilt made by herself which is not only a specimen of fine needlework, but also a family relic which will be highly appreciated in years to come. It is composed of 7,649 pieces of calico, samples of her grandchildren's dresses.

The Atlanta and Hawkinsville railway officials have contracted with the Rhode Island Locomotive works for their locomotives, through Mr. J. V. Motter, agent for the company. The freight engines are to be duplicates of the ten-wheelers built by this company for the Western and Atlantic railway last year; weight 96,000 pounds.

An alleged "faith cure" doctor named Banks has been operating upon rheumatics in Marietta street. He was so unsuccessful that he left Atlanta in disgust. His patients claim that he did them more harm than good. An aged colored man told a reporter last night that Banks had beaten him out of seven dollars. This doctor is the same one who was run out of Augusta some months ago.

On the 22nd of July there will be a reunion of the Forty-second Georgia regiment at Grant park. Yesterday afternoon a committee met in the office of Ordinary Calhoun to agree upon arrangements for the festivities. It was intended to camp in the park two nights, but it has been found that the necessary tents cannot be had, so this feature of the programme will have to be omitted. There will be a very large gathering of the members of this famous regiment. The local committee is preparing diligently to make the occasion a memorable one. Governor Gordon and other prominent visitors will be invited to make addresses.

A delightful entertainment was given by the Willing Workers, of the First Baptist church, at the residence of Mr. E. G. Willingham, on Friday evening. The following programme was rendered and highly enjoyed by those present: Instrumental music—Miss Lillian Clark; Original poem—Miss Pet Willingham; Reading—Miss Lizzie Fry; Music—Miss Lillian Martin; Recitation—Walter Forbes; Recitation—Miss Gertrude Bealer; Song—Miss Julia Willingham; Humorous reading—Mr. A. W. Bealer. The recitation of Miss Gertrude Bealer was unusually fine, as was also the singing of Miss Julia Willingham, and well merited the hearty applause bestowed upon them. In fact, all the performances were good.

THE MAYOR'S MISTAKE.

His Salvation Army Order Severely Denounced.

THE ARMY WILL PROBABLY NOT OBEY IT

Public Sentiment Decidedly Against the Mayor—His Order Denounced as an Attempt to Curtail Religious Liberty.

Public opinion is against Mayor Cooper's action in issuing an order against the proposed Salvation Army parade.

It is difficult to see why he should have made an exception in the case of the Army, and especially why he should prohibit a parade on the fourth while allowing them on other days.

The Mayor's action was the almost universal topic of conversation, yesterday, and on all sides he was severely criticised.

"Mayor Cooper has made a very foolish break," said a prominent merchant to a CONSTITUTION representative. "His order to Captain Couch was silly, but the reasons he assigns for that order are worse than silly. What right has he to set himself up as judge of the quality of a man's religion? If he is a Methodist and I am a Baptist, does his position give him any right to say how or when I shall worship? The idea is puerile. His action in this matter looks to me like a

VERY CHILDISH PROCEEDING.

Others who discussed the matter talked in the same strain. They held that there is a grave principle involved and that the thing is more serious than it appeared on the face. While it is probably true that under certain circumstances the mayor might be justified in issuing a general order prohibiting parades of any kind on a certain day, it is difficult to find any justification for his prohibiting the army from taking its daily airings, while allowing other societies and bodies to march as much as they placed.

Yesterday was a busy day with the officers of the army. The mayor's order did not have the effect of preventing their going ahead with their preparations for the banquet and other exercises for the fourth, which they have determined to make a gala day.

THE CAPTAIN TALKS.

"The mayor's order," said Captain Brucker, "was entirely undeserved and was issued without any real knowledge of the state of affairs. We had intended nothing more than we have every evening and every Sunday afternoon. Why such parade should be objectionable upon the fourth of July of all other days."

"You see we expect a number of visiting officers and soldiers from Savannah, Augusta, Macon, Columbus and other points in Georgia, and we thought it would be nice to have our parade at four o'clock in the afternoon instead of in the evening as we usually do. It was our intention to make about the usual parade through the principal streets, returning to the barracks about five o'clock. Then we are to have a banquet from five to nine, after which there will be a short service."

"Will the programme be carried out?"

"Well, I don't know. You see the whole matter is in the hands of Colonel Light. I tell you frankly that I am

IN FAVOR OF PARADING.

I don't believe the Lord intends that we shall desist from his work, on account of a little persecution. I don't believe the mayor had any right to issue that order against us. If he had issued a general order against parades, and if there had been any good reason for it, we would have obeyed without a word. As it is I can't say what we will do, but I don't hesitate to say what I am in favor of."

Colonel Light was found at the new training home on Marietta street just beyond the cotton mill. The second floor of a business block has been fitted up in the shape of a dormitory. Here the soldiers will live.

When the reporter called at the new headquarters the colonel was hard at work getting things in shape. He said that he had not decided what to do concerning the mayor's order, and would not decide before today.

"I will make a formal announcement of our intentions on Sunday. My mind is about made up, but I do not care to commit myself as yet. We have had a pretty easy time in Atlanta, and

CAN STAND A LITTLE PERSECUTION."

When told that public sentiment was against the mayor, Colonel Light said that he was not surprised.

"I went down to see him this morning to find out the reasons for his action. The only reason he would give was that he didn't take any stock in our kind of religion. I got the mayor to admit that he would allow theatrical companies, minstrel companies, military companies or anybody else to parade, with the single exception of the Salvation Army. And he will let us parade on any other day excepting the Fourth of July."

THE ARMY BARRACKS

was crowded last night, many people being attracted by a desire to hear what the members would say concerning the proposed parade. The subject was not discussed at any length, but several members alluded to it in the course of their talks. The old man said:

"I'm ready to go to jail Monday. If they put me in jail I can stay there. I have done a heap of daring works for the devil, and now I'm not going back on the cause of Christ. Let em jail us if they like."

Others spoke in the same strain. Captain Brucker, in the course of a few remarks, said: "Let the newspapers pitch in. They advertise us—they try our pluck. I wouldn't give the snap of my finger for a soldier that was not willing to die under his colors. We'll turn out Monday. We'll have a big time. I'm willing to die in Jesus's cause, and I'd turn out Monday and have a big time if I knew they'd cut my head off with a hatchet. A reporter told me today they thought us humbugs. Let 'em think. We'll wake the old sinners of Atlanta up yet."

It is pretty safe to predict that the soldiers, or some of them, will parade according to the programme. If they do there will be fun. They feel that the best people of Atlanta will uphold them in disobeying what is almost universally considered a senseless and foolish order, and they are willing to undergo arrest if necessary.

On the other hand, Acting Chief Couch is determined to carry out Mayor Cooper's instructions to the letter. Captain Couch's first intimation of the proposed parade was received from the programme, which Mayor Cooper inclosed in his letter containing the famous order. That order will be carried out if it takes every policeman on the force.

As a sort of postscript, it might be added right here, that the Atlanta Artillery is to be allowed to fire thirty-eight guns at the corner of Forsyth and Alabama streets, one of the most prominent places in the business portion of the city, beginning at noon on Monday.

Further comment is unnecessary.

The Patapsco Guano Company.

We stated a few days ago on what we considered undoubted authority that the Patapsco Guano company would withdraw its agent from Georgia on July 1st. Our informant still adheres to his statement. Mr. J. Rice Smith, the general agent of the company states, however, that such is not the case; that the company will continue business in Georgia and has no idea whatever of withdrawing. We print his statement with pleasure.

CUT IN THE HEAD.

A Young Man Found Insensible in the Streets Last Night.

Last night, shortly before 12 o'clock, Mr. S. C. Bowman was walking along Walton street toward his boardinghouse, when his attention was drawn to an object on the pavement near the corner of Cone street. Going up to it he discovered a man lying upon the pavement. The man was insensible, and blood was spurting from a hole in his head. His clothes were covered with blood.

Mr. Bowman at first thought the man was dead, and he hurried off to get help. He was soon joined by several young men, who assisted him in carrying the wounded man to the office of Drs. Westmoreland & Howell. A plank was brought into use for this purpose. By the time the party reached the office, Dr. Dan Howell, who had been summoned by telephone, appeared.

The wounded man was identified as Charley Bacon, who is a clerk in Hunnicutt & Bellingrath's housefurnishing goods establishment. In a few minutes he was restored to consciousness, but he refused to talk. It was impossible to induce him to tell anything about the way in which he was injured.

Dr. Howell probed the wound and sewed it up. It was found to be an ugly cut, fully an inch long and very deep. Evidently it was inflicted with a heavy blunt instrument. The sufferer was made as comfortable as possible and carried to his home. At a very late hour he was resting well. The wound, though a painful one, is not regarded as dangerous.

ARREST OF MOONSHINERS.

Futile Attempt to Rescue a Prisoner at Douglasville.

A. W. Fite, deputy collector, and Deputy Marshals McDonald and Abercrombie seized one seventy-five gallon copper still in Paulding county, yesterday. Kinch Bearden was arrested and five hundred gallons of beer and eight fermenters destroyed. The officers were followed to Douglasville by two brothers of Bearden, who tried to rescue the prisoner, but after a short struggle the officers arrested Ben Bearden and brought him along with his brother to Atlanta and lodged them both in jail. There will be a hearing of the matter before the commissioner tomorrow.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Two Games at Athletic Park.

The Gradys will play two games of ball at Athletic park on the fourth. In the morning they have as their opponents a strong nine from the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia shops. This nine includes several of the strongest amateur players, and a close game may be expected. The personnel of the two nines is as follows:

GRADYS.		E. T. VA. AND GA.
Ford	catcher	Figg
Whittaker	pitcher	Shaw
Hall	1st base	Irving
Key	2d base	Rice
Green	3d base	McLaughlin
Lawshe	short stop	Adams
Murphy	left field	Pitchford
Harper	middle field	Cunningham
Baker	right field	Blackburn

In the afternoon the Gradys will have as their opponents a strong amateur club from Cartersville, Ga. The Grady's will present the same nine as in the morning game with the exception of the battery, which will consist of Key catcher and Harper pitcher.

Twenty-five cents admission will be charged at the gates, ladies admitted free. The games will doubtless be interesting ones.

An Attempt to Play Two Games.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 2.—[Special.]—The Nashvilles celebrated their return home by an overwhelming defeat at the hands of Memphis. The audience was small, the game uninteresting and the result unsatisfactory to all. Umpire Suck gave one very tough decision that gave Memphis two runs, but the locals were beaten away out of sight any way. Smith carried of the honors of the day, being hit safely but four times, and he was well supported. The visitors worked as one man, and played to win from the start, while the locals seemed to lose heart at the beginning. The defeat was not so astonishing, but to be shut out disgusted everybody. There will be an attempt to play two games on Monday.

The Typewriter Operator.

There is published in Boston a newspaper known as "The Typewriter Operator," which is managed solely in the interest of the great army of fifty thousand operators of writing machines. Crenshaw, the dealer for the Remington, is prepared to send this interesting sheet gratuitously to every operator and stenographer in Atlanta. The only thing necessary to send to him, 2½ Marietta street, your address. The paper is not an advertising scheme for any one concern, and Mr. Crenshaw's liberality shows his interest in the profession, and will doubtless be appreciated. Send him your address at once.

A great revival has attended his ministry. He preached at the First Methodist church last Sunday night and made a fine impression. He will preach at Trinity church tonight. Those who attend may expect a treat.

OUR friend Judge McCormick Neal, of Covington, returned last evening from New York, whither he had been summoned on important business by the immense snuff manufacturing concern of Messrs. G. B. Miller & Co., which concern we are glad to know he is very successfully representing. This sterling old manufactory was established in 1776, and every stage of its existence from that date has been marked by an integrity which has gone unquestioned. Its reputation for responsibility and fair dealing has become "world wide," for an inferior article of merchandise is never permitted to be shipped from its warehouses. Having known Judge Neal from early boyhood, we feel no hesitancy in claiming for him the most particular attention of the trade. His utter inability to deceive or misrepresent is too universally known to need comment at our hand, and we bespeak for him an overwhelming success in the comparative new field into which he has entered. Fortunate, indeed, was the concern to secure the services of one whom not to know is to argue yourself unknown in the south.

WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

[This is the ladies' column. They are invited to express their opinions herein—to use it as their own. The editress will answer questions or accept suggestions with pleasure.]

Grandmother.

Safe from the tempests of hopes and fears,
In the sheltered calm of her fourscore years;
O'er her silvered head the seasons pass
Light as the zephyrs that sway the grass.

Though life for her holds nothing more
Than the passing hence to the farther shore,
Yet the patient hands and ready will
With love's sweet missions are busied still.

The maxims taught in childhood's school,
In feeble age are her guide and rule;
And idle fingers, to fold or twirl,
Were thought a disgrace when she was a girl.

When the woods awake at the touch of spring,
When the lilacs bloom and the robins sing,
And between the orchard trees a-row
The blossoms fall like the falling snow.

Bright though the gathered mist of years
A fairer scene to her sight appears;
And the robins sing and the lilacs blow,
In the happy springs of the long ago.

With eyes grown dim with the mists of age,
Serene she ponders the sacred page;
Conning the precepts, day by day,
That guide to the straight and narrow way.

Knowing the promise of God is sure,
And that his mercies for aye endure—
Life's labor ended, its duties done,
Tranquil she waits to be summoned home.

THERE are so many women seeking occupations that will be self-supporting that an article from the Ladies Home Journal may prove both interesting and helpful. With that hope I give it in full. Hundreds of girls are making applications for teacher's places—some just out of school—so many in fact that the teachers outnumber the children, and it seems almost impossible to obtain situations. Why not turn your attention to be keeping. Not long since a little girl living in Florida wrote me a sweet letter, in which she described her grandfather's pretty home and said he had a great many bees, and she says: "He has taken 500 pounds of honey off one day last week, and the little caps look so white and pretty. If you will accept I will send you a cap of his nice honey and a pretty bouquet of flowers from his flower garden, as a token of my love to you." In a few day there came a packege from Molina, Fla., and true to her word, little Mabel Moore had sent the "token of her love." The flowers were lovely and their perfume perfect, but what can I say of the honey? I have never seen nor tasted anything so delicious. There were two cups and the honeycomb was as white as snow, while the honey itself was perfectly clear and the flavor different from anything I had ever tasted. I don't think my family ever had a present we enjoyed half so much, and we wished we lived near enough to keep our table supplied with such delightful honey. How many people feel the same way—and I don't see why bee culture should not be profitable. I commend the article on "Bee Keeping" for your careful perusal.

Bee Keeping as a Pursuit for Women.

From the Ladies' Home Journal.

In the March number of the Ladies Home Journal I notice an article by Ella Rodman Church in which she mentions bee keeping as a money making occupation for women. I was much interested in its perusal, having been connected with a large apiary for three years, and having become quite expert in manipulating bees. I can with a few exceptions. indorse what she has wrote of it, and in this communication, will endeavor to set forth both sides of the story.

Bee keeping is profitable, to those who have an interest in it, but the majority of small bee keepers seem to think that, after they have placed colonies of bees on the summer stands, all they have to do is to take off honey. However this may be, I have always found it otherwise. As in any other pursuit there is work to do and plenty of it.

I differ with the writer about children and old people caring for bees. Children are useful in apiaries in watching the hives when swarms are expected off, and also in waiting upon the apiarist, while aged persons are generally too enfeebled to do more than children.

In regard to the outfit for bee keeping, I will enumerate some of the necessary articles. The all important thing is a moveable frame hive. Of these there are many different styles manufactured. The Langstroth hive is, probably, the one most generally in use. The principal feature of this one is a long, shallow, frame. But I have had the best success with a hive called the New England No. 7. It is packed all around and underneath the brood nest, both in winter and in summer, and is adapted to the Langstroth frame. I have used a number of other styles but prefer this, on account of the larger yield of honey. The next necessary article is a smoker. The Quinby is the best. A bee hat is also needed. To make this, I go to the gentlemen's furnishing rooms and purchase a "last year's" hat having a rim two inches wide. I also purchase one and one-half yards of cheap, light colored lawn, as bees take serious offence at dark of fuzzy goods. At the hardware store I get one-fourth of black wire screen cloth. I never use green as it is blinding to the eyes. I cut the screen cloth nine inches deep in front and two in back, and sew the straight edge to the hat rim and on the bottom of the screen I gather the one and one-half yards of lawn, lengthwise. This makes the best and the most inexpensive hat that I have used. When I have it on, I gather it tightly around or under the collar of my dress and fasten it down closely in front. I do not let my skirts sweep the ground and never use gloves as I deem them "more hindrance than help" and stings do not affect me much.

An authentic book on bees is also desirable. I will mention two: "Quinby's New Bee Keeping" and "Alley's Handy Book."

I neglected to state that the race of bees is also very [illegible]portant. Pure Italians are very nice but I pre[illegible]oss of Italians with Holylands, as they are [illegible]oney gatherers.

[illegible] I would advise beginners to use Italians at first as the Holylands increase too fast for inexperienced persons to handle.

In a fine locality ninety pounds of honey may be considerod an average amount for a colony which swarms but oace in a seasou, while in a good locality seventy-five pounds per colony may be expected. By a "fine locality" I mean a region where white clover and linden abounds. Raspberry is a very good honey plant, but does not last long. In case white clover is not found in one's vicinity, Alsyke clover may be grown in its stead.

One should not commence with over three colonies for the first year. They should be secured in April or May, perhaps earlier, in a warmer climate. If they are purchased from some one near by they should be moved before they have flown many times as they always mark the position of their hive and will return to the old stand if removed to another place in the vicinity.

Clear, white, honey, neatly put up in one pound sections, I have always retailed at 25c per pound at the home market, and have wholesaled it at 20c. or 22c. per pound. I produce comb honey entirely as the extracted is not profitable. Let the apiarist seek diligently to create a home market. This is not difficult to do if one will occasionally distribute samples of their honey. In my vicinity where four years ago not over $25.00 was sold in a year, the market now demands between $300 and $400 every season in honey.

I do not consider my social or intellectual standing injured in the least by my labors in the apiary. During the past three years, besides doing this work, I have studied the Latin, Greek and German language and higher matematics, so that with one more year of study I shall be prepared to enter any New England college.

The coming summer I expect to take the entire charge of an apiary of seventy-five colonies, and shall in connection with that, study the French language and Greek and Roman history. Bee keeping has been no hindrance to me in my studies as I shall see a few summers yet before I reach my twenty-first birthday. I would advise young women who desire an education, to take up this pursuit, as it is much more profitable than school teaching, while being much more healthful, as it requires one's attention out of doors.

In closing I will say that to any one writing and sending a stamp for reply, I will send the address of the parties from whom may be secured the bee supplies I have mentioned in this communication.

Borrowing.

Estelle Mendell, in Good Housekeeping.

Make it a rule to never do it, and then do it only when positively obliged to! And in nine cases out of ten; where one is awake to the wants of the household, this evil can be effectually forstalled.

Borrowing is often carried to such an extent that it becomes a nuisance—makes hard feelings, and even enemies, among the best of friends. One can hardly be expected to remember the needles, pins, thread, cup of sugar, eggs, flour, baking powder, saleratus, etc., sent for in so many cases of "dire extremity." The one who loans has, of course, a better memory, but is very loth to speak of these trifles," but which aggregate quite a sum in the end.

The habit of borrowing small sums of money from a neighbor is especially to be deprecated. I recall two instances, and doubtless the reader could duplicate them: Mrs. W—— borrowed of Mrs. C——, in sums of five and ten cents for street car fare and to make change (by actual account), three dollars, not a penny of which was ever returned or alluded to by the receiver. Miss F——, under "great pressure," obtained of an aged friend, who could ill afford the loss, small sums of money until it amounted to five dollars. She only "wished it for a few days," but years have passed, and the debt is not cancelled. Even the most corrupt jury would, we think, convict these two persons of (polite) thieving rather than neighborly borrowing.

As we have admitted, borrowing is sometimes allowable; but one should be prompt and conscientious in returning even the smallest article.

It is proverbial of some persons that one must go after what is lent them. I know a lady who annually makes the tour of her neighborhood to find the carpet stretcher she lent in the spring before.

There are many things, such as quilting frames, soap kettle, bags and chairs, etc., together with the fabled "umbrella," that may as well be bought, with the expectation that they will soon become public property and lost—at least to the original owner.

Let us strike against borrowing, and boycott the borrowers.

The Rancher's Baby.

From the Chicago Herald.

"At Rawlins, Wyoming, a few weeks ago," said a commercial traveler, "I saw one of the sadest incidents it has ever been my misfortune to witness. A rancher rode into town on horseback holding in his arms a dead baby—a sweet little thing with flaxen hair which curled all over its head, soft blue eyes which had not been closed even in death. Seventy-five miles across the country the rancher had carried the dead baby in his arms. I talked with him and heard his story. It was like this: A year or more ago he had begun a correspondence with a young woman in Chicago, getting her address from a matrimonial paper, The result was an exchange of photographs and finally marriage. The girl went to live with him on his ranch, but the lonely life there did not suit the city girl, and a few weeks after the birth of her babe she ran away to Chicago, leaving husband and child behind her. There was no woman on the ranch, and the rough father did the best he could to rear the child. I have no doubt he was tender and attentive—in fact, he said that he neglected his stock and did nothing else but care for the child—but, robbed of its mother's care, the little one sickened and died.

"'My life seemed to go out with that 'ar little one!' said the rancher, in his rough way, 'an' when she died I cried like a woman. Then my heart seemed to rise in anger against the mother, and I felt that I could kill her. It seemed to me that ar' babe would be alive an' smillin' and cooin' today if her mother had not deserted her. Then, says I to myself, I'll be revenged. And so I wrapped the poor little one in a blanket, jumped on my horse and came here. I'm going to send the mother a little present, a peace offerin' from her deserted husband. I'm goin' to send her the body of her little 'un.'

"He actually procured a little coffin and laid the babe in it, after kissing the white face again and again, and cutting a few locks of her golden hair from the little round head. There were no tears in his eyes—he seemed to be past that—but as he turned away from the railroad station, where he had shipped the body to an address in Chicago which I shall not give, he appeared to me the most broken hearted man I'd ever seen.

"In five minutes he came running back, seized the little box and exclaimed:

"'No, no! I can't do it. Give me my little 'un. Keep the money, but give me my little girl.'

"Before the station agent could say a word the man had put the box on his shoulder and ran away. Five minutes later he saw him on his horse, the box in his arms, galloping back to his ranch."

Koumiss.

We have frequently been asked to give a recipe for the very healthy drink. The editor of the Western Plowman says, "We prepare koumiss in this way: We take a quart size, self-sealing, glass fruit can, and fill it with sweet milk. Then add two or three spoonfulls of sugar, and the milk well shaken. About one quarter of a one cent yeast cake completes the preparation, and then the cover is screwed down tight. Place the jar where it will be subject to the temperature of about seventy degrees Fahrenheit, and shake it well at intervals of about one hour. If you make it in the morning, let it remain until night, when it may be placed on ice or in a cool place. The next morning it will be ready for use. In opening the can it had better be done over a pan, as the koumiss frequently comes out in something of a hurry. If you want it particularly effervescent, put a little sugar in the glass you pour it into. Of course, champagne bottles are better than fruit cans, but the latter are always handy and will answer the purpose. Koumiss is said to be a good nourishment for weak stomachs, being readily and easily assimilated. It is not intoxicating—at least we don't think it is. We never drank more than two quarts at one sitting, and hence don't know what the effect would be if a person drank a considerable quantity of it. The only effect of koumiss we ever experienced, was a desire to join in a game of leap frog with the little Plowmen, but beyond that slight mental disturbance no intoxicating tendencies ever manifested themselves."

When to Stop.

From the National Stockman.

If you can trust yourself to cease when you are really and heartily tired, when rest is refreshment—but too many women work just to finish this or that, long after fatigue has set in. Their bodies may not feel much more tired than they were an hour or two earlier, but instead of cheerful physical fatigue, when it is real comfort to sit down and rest, and laugh and talk perhaps, or read something pleasant; instead of this good feeling, has come nervous fatigue, a very different matter. The least word irritates us, and when we finally cease it is not to rest with cheerful talk or reading, and a delicious sense of work done and repose earned, but we sink down too tired to rest, feeling completely worn out, ill and ready to cry rather than laugh. We may seem to get over once such abuse as this, or two or three times, but by degrees this nervous irritability will become, not a rare experience consequent on rare fatigue, but will follow even very little exertion, and the result will be the shattered, pallid woman, faded and worn out long before life's prime.

Scarf Tidy.

Ettie Green in Housekeeper.

I have just been making a very pretty scarf tidy and will tell the Housekeeper readers about it. First I bought one and a quarter yard of cream colored swiss with large polka dots woven in the goods, (window curtain material). Cost fifty cents a yard. Narrow hem on sides, wide hem on the ends. Then I outlined the polka dots with silver tinsel, and run a sort of irregular net work of lines between the dots with the tinsel, which comes in balls at six cents each, and is sewed on by being caught down with fine silk. I finished the ends with cream colored lace, and tied in a loose knot.

Home Decorations.

Two large yellow sunflowers and one small one made of tissue paper with plenty of green leaves around them look charming in a small corner of the parlor. Take a piece of card board six inches long and four wide, cover with blue velvet, and sew on six buds that you can buy for thirty cents at a trimming store; three buff and three red, and a small piece of smilax vine.

Useful Scraps.

To keep the hens and chickens from being lousy, put a few sprigs of cedar leaves in each nest. Sure death to lice.

Kansas Sister.—Fill a cheese-cloth bag, made like a tiny satchel, with "flour of sulphur;" tie with a narrow ribbon to the top of the cage; every motion of the bird will cause the tiniest quantity of the powder to sift down. It will not be long before the little mites are exterminated.

In ironing, have a piece of sand paper, such as carpenters use, lying on the table handy. It removes the stickiness of starch from the iron perfectly, with only a rub or two across it.

Queries and Answers.

Dr. J. Abner, of Texas.—Would like for some one to send to Woman's Kingdom the poem beginning with these lines:

For dried shall be earth's deepest river—
The waves of the sea rest in time;
But a mother's love is forever and ever,
Immortal, unchanging, sublime.

Mrs. M. C. Barber would like to exchange with Mrs. V. L. B., Laurel Hill, Miss., a sample of roseleaf insertion, for one of roseleaf lace.

Correspondence.

Mabel Clare, Southwest, Ga.—I would like to exchange cuttings of geraniums and other greenhouse plants, for silk scraps (nice quality), to be used for crazy patchwork. Should any one desire to exchange please give address.

Lulu, Green county, Ga.—Sisters of Virginia hearken and help! Years ago my father purchased two negro girls from a trader. Their names were Sarah and Mary Williams. Sarah died. Mary continued to live in La Grange, Ga., until within the last few years, when, through the influence of a Mr. Williams, in whose family Mary's mother still lived, she returned to Virginia, to her mother. Now to what part of Virginia, I have no idea, so this is really like "searching for a needle in a hay stack." but knowing that your paper finds its way into every state and county, I dare hope these lines, will be read by some one who can give me information as to Mary's present whereabouts. Your paper has worked miracles stranger than this. The editress has my address.

Enquirer.—Will the kind editress or some of the many subscribers tell me where I can get the book titled "Self Raised or From the Depth?" I think there are two volumes, if so, please tell me; also, what will be the cost? I am very anxious for it, as I have read only a part of one volume? I will be under many obligations to any who will give me information of the book.

S. H. Lisbon, La.—I see many letters where ladies want help and have obtained it through your valuable paper. I thought I would see if I could get some help. I want two or three young men to work on the farm, there is not very many young men to hire in this country. Young men come out west, I will endeavor to do the best I can for you. I will furnish good reference, you must do the same. Send stamp to the editress for my address, Long live the Woman's Kingdom and its dear editress.

Birdie, Summer, Ga.—I am a young housekeeper and knock for admittance into the Kingdom, from which I have gained so much useful information. My husband is as fond of the Kingdom as I am; he says your piece on "Children in the Home," is worth a years subscription to the paper, and I fully agree with him. If Mrs. L. P. Coleman will try the following receipt for canning fruit; I think she will pronounce it good: For peaches or apples, peel and wash. cut in four or five pieces, put in a preserving kettle, pour in water until the fruit is quite covered, set them on the fire and bring to a simmer, have a pot of boiling water setting side of your fruit kettle, and have a tub of warm water near at hand with your jars and lids in it; when the fruit begins to simmer, put your jars in a little sack and pour a dipper of boiling water over it, then set it in the boiling water. After the jars begin to cool go and retighten as some may become loosened.

Mary Cox, Hardeman, Ga.—Through the kindness of a friend, I am permitted to read your paper. I live with my relatives—and have but few relatives—in Harris county. My mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Thomas, daughter of Evan Thomas, who died in the war with Mexico. A good many years ago my mother's sister, Sarah Ann Thomas, lived in Jasper or Morgan county, Ga., and married James Copeland. My great-grandfather was Robt. Wright, of Putnam county, Ga. I am exceedingly anxious to correspond with any person who can give me information concerning my relatives back in Georgia. When mama last heard from her brother, Jack Robin (or "Buck") Thomas, he was wounded and at Chattanooga, Tenn. Please print this that I may hear from my long lost relatives.

M. E. A., Greensboro, Webster county, Miss.—Permit me to thank you for the cosy room you have fitted up for the benefit of so many. If you think my scattering thoughts are worth a place in your Kingdom, they are at your disporal. D. L. Swaburg's note indicate noble thoughts for one of her years. It touched a tender chord in my heart, for my parents are old and decrepid, and though I have tried in my weak way to be a comfort to them in their declining years, I fear that there are many things which I could do for their comfort and pleasure that will be left undone, it is too late. We should have a tender place in our hearts for the aged. Our parents were strong props for us from infancy to manhood and womanhood. Count the years they have supported and held us up, the privations they have undergone for us, the anxious days and sleepless nights they have spent over us, binding this aching head and cooling that fevered brow; note the easy tread of the mother as she passes from one sick child to another, ever ready to administer to the slightest wants of her children. They are watchful of us till we have homes of our own. Ah, their care for us does not cease here, nor will it while life lasts. Sons and daughters, where ere you be. let's stand by these tried friends, we leant heavily on them a number of years, now lets invite them to lean on us. We owe this to them, lets anticipate their wishes and pleasures as they did ours; administer to their necessities; in sickness let them be cared for by children, the heart calls loudest for these; let us do unto them as we would our children should do to us in like circumstances.

Lula Malone, Tugaloo, Oconee county, S. C.—I have been sitting all alone gazing with fascinated eyes at the clouds which seems to be slowly sinking with the sun behind the western horizon. As I gazed these words came over me like the memory of some half-forgotten dream:

How calm is the twilight, the darkening clouds
In the west are lazily piled;
Night steals o'er each like a mother who bends
O'er the couch of her slumbering child.

But in this instance the clouds were most brilliant and beautiful. As I was admiring their extreme beauty, they seemed to be transformed into scenes, and a panorama of my past life slowly swept along the sky. Then came the present, and as those scenes slowly but distinctly passed within my power of vision, I turned with anxious eyes to peer into the future. But, alas! a thick veil seemed to envelope the clouds, and they faded away, and as no mortal eye can lift the veil and unravel the strange mysteries of the future, I was left in darkness, and compelled to leave cloudland, to confront the stern scenes of reality. I write, wishing some of the ladies to exchange embroidery designs with me, either in open work for lawn, or raised work for crazy patch work, not that I have a particular mania for such work, but like it for a change, at leisure, as variety is the spice of life. I have some very elaborate patterns that I will give in exchange if desired. Also, if any one has the words of "See that my grave's kept green." I would be so glad to get them.

[...]—Special Rates for Delegates to In[terstate] Farmers' Convention—General Closing Up on the Fourth.

Special rates have been secured for delega[tes to] the interstate convention of farmers, a[nd a] large crowd is expected. The various [federal], state and county offices will be closed [on] the fourth.

The Governor and His Cabinet.

GOVERNOR GORDON HAS not taken a[ction] yet in the requisition case of McNa[lly] and Stone. Owing to the fact that indictme[nts] exist against both Stone and McNally in Ge[orgia], there is no particular reason why the g[over]nor should grant the requisitions just no[w]. Georgia justice must be satisfied before t[he] Carolina courts can take up the case aga[inst] the two men. As the requisition papers a[re] all right, it will be the governor's duty [to] honor them, which he will no doubt do at t[he] proper time.

THE GOVERNOR ON YESTERDAY issued [an] order closing all the statehouse offices on M[on]day, July 4th. The fourth of July is a le[gal] holiday all throughout the union and the [...] [...]ous courts, postoffice and customhouse offi[ces] will be closed also on that day. It is usu[al for] the statehouse for the heads of the vario[us] departments to appear at their offi[ces] some time during the day to look aft[er] any important mail matter that may arri[ve]. The regular routine of business is not tra[ns]acted, however.

FOR THE PAST FEW days very few commi[ss]ions have been issued to justices of the pea[ce] and notaries public. Much of the routine wo[rk] of the executive department is after this fas[h]ion. Yesterday no commissions were issue[d] but C. B. Bostwick, justice of the peace of t[he] 400th district, Spalding county, sent in h[is] resignation. The resignation was accepted a[nd] the ex-justice notified.

COMPTROLLER-GENERAL WRIGHT on yeste[r]day received the return of the Connecticu[t] Fire insurance company. The company al[so] paid taxes to the amount of $121.45. Inqui[ry] at the comptroller-general's office yesterda[y] disclosed the fact that the business of life in[s]urance had wonderfully increased in Georgi[a] within the past year. The following fig[ures] will indicate the immense increas[e] better than any words can do. The word[s] "old line" means regular life insurance com[pa]nies, and does not include companies tha[t] employ the various assessment plans. In 188[6] that is from April 30th, 1886, to April 30th 1887, the amount of risks of all the life insu[r]ance companies doing business in Georgia wa[s] $9,566,167.00; premiums, $441,537.73; taxe[s] $4,432.60. From April 30th, 1887, to Apr[il] 30th, 1888, the amount of risks so far reporte[d] will aggregate $23,196,041.70; premiums, $76[9,]464.98; taxes, $7,694.65 (estimated.) showin[g] an increase in risks of $13,629,874.70, and a[n] increase in premiums of $327,927.25.

COMMISSIONER HENDERSON SOME TIME ag[o] wrote Commissioner Slaughter, of the South[]ern Passenger association, asking reduced rat[es] for the delegates the interstate conventi[on] of farmers. Some time elapsed before a r[e]ply was received, but yesterday Commissio[ner] Slaughter transmitted the following resol[u]tion to the commissioner of agricultur[e]: "Resolved, That the rate of one fare for th[e] round trip from points within the states o[f] Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Caroli[na] and Tennessee, be given to delegates and the[ir] families visiting the interstate convention o[f] farmers, to be held August 16th, 1887. Roun[d] trip tickets, limited to a continuous passag[e] in each direction, to be on sale August 15th an[d] 16th, limited to ten days from date of sal[e], iron clad forms to be used." Nothing h[as] been heard from the other five cotton stat[es] yet as to rates, but it is understood that rat[es] as good as those contained in the above resol[u]tion will be given.

News Gathered from the Various Departments.

NOTHING DONE IN STONE & M'NALLY

Cases—Special Rates for Delegates to Interstate Farmers' Convention—General Closing Up on the Fourth.

Special rates have been secured for delegates to the interstate convention of farmers, and a large crowd is expected. The various federal, state and county offices will be closed on the fourth.

The Governor and His Cabinet.

GOVERNOR GORDON HAS not taken any action yet in the requisition case of McNally and Stone. Owing to the fact that indictments exist against both Stone and McNally in Georgia, there is no particular reason why the governor should grant the requisitions just now. Georgia justice must be satisfied before the Carolina courts can take up the case against the two men. As the requisition papers are all right, it will be the governor's duty to honor them, which he will no doubt do at the proper time.

THE GOVERNOR ON YESTERDAY issued an order closing all the statehouse offices on Monday, July 4th. The fourth of July is a legal holiday all throughout the union and the various courts, postoffice and customhouse offices will be closed also on that day. It is usual at the statehouse for the heads of the various departments to appear at their offices some time during the day to look after any important mail matter that may arrive. The regular routine of business is not transacted, however.

FOR THE PAST FEW days very few commissions have been issued to justices of the peace and notaries public. Much of the routine work of the executive department is after this fashion. Yesterday no commissions were issued, but C. B. Bostwick, justice of the peace of the 900th district, Spalding county, sent in his resignation. The resignation was accepted and the ex-justice notified.

COMPTROLLER-GENERAL WRIGHT on yesterday received the return of the Connecticut Fire insurance company. The company also paid taxes to the amount of $121.45. Inquiry at the comptroller-general's office yesterday disclosed the fact that the business of life insurance had wonderfully increased in Georgia within the past year. The following figures will indicate the immense increase better than any words can do. The words "old line" means regular life insurance companies, and does not include companies that employ the various assessment plans. In 1886, that is from April 30th, 1886, to April 30th, 1887, the amount of risks of all the life insurance companies doing business in Georgia was $9,566,167.00; premiums. $441,537.73; taxes, $4,432.60. From April 30th, 1887, to April 30th, 1888, the amount of risks so far reported will aggregate $23,196,041.70; premiums, $769,464.98; taxes, $7,694.65 (estimated,) showing an increase in risks of $13,629,874.70, and an increase in premiums of $327,927.25.

COMMISSIONER HENDERSON SOME TIME ago wrote Commissioner Slaughter, of the Southern Passenger association, asking reduced rates for the delegates the interstate convention of farmers. Some time elapsed before a reply was received, but yesterday Commissionor Slaughter transmitted the following resolution to the commissioner of agriculture: "Resolved, That the rate of one fare for the round trip from points within the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee, be given to delegates and their families visiting the interstate convention of farmers, to be held August 16th, 1887. Round trip tickets, limited to a continuous passage in each direction, to be on sale August 15th and 16th, limited to ten days from date of sale; iron clad forms to be used." Nothing has been heard from the other five cotton states yet as to rates, but it is understood that rates as good as those contained in the above resolution will be given.

AMONG THE VISITORS to the executive department yesterday were the following: Hon. D. B. Harrold, house of representatives; Z. J. Fitzpatrick, Blakely, Ga.; Hon. J. H. Pittman, house of representatives; H. H. Jones, Savannah Morning News; Hon. N. J. Hammond; Charles C. Cox, LaGrange, Ga; Hon. William A. Harris, secretary of the senate, and several well known Atlanta gentlemen.

Treasurer Hardeman went down to Oxford yesterday and will not return until Tuesday morning. The treasury will be closed on Monday.

Supreme Court Reporter J. H. Lumpkin has been in Athens for several days arguing an injunction case before Judge Hutchins of the Western circuit.

Secretary W. A. Harris, of the senate, arrived in the city yesterday, and will soon have everything in order for the session of the senate, which begins on Wednesday, the 6th instant.

Hon. D. B. Harrell, member of the house from Webster county, has arrived in the city, prepared to stay for the session. Mr. Harrell is a prominent member of the house.

Principal Keeper Towers, of the penitentiary, went up to Rome yesterday morning. He will not return until Tuesday, as he has been feeling very unwell for several days.

The mail at the executive department has been very heavy for the past few days. Governor Gordon opens and attends to his own mail, with the exception of executive letters.

The prospects for the interstate convention of farmers grow brighter and brighter every day. It will be difficult to find a hall large enough to hold the convention.

Newspapers throughout the state are requested to copy the resolution of the Southern Passenger association, giving special rates to delegates and their families.

The County Courts.

MATTERS IN THE county courthouse were exceedingly dull yesterday. None of the courts were in session. Judge Marshall J. Clarke, however, sat in chambers to hear a few motions, and there was a call of the docket in the superior court.

MRS. VEAL, THE woman who was reported to be insane, was not taken before Ordinary Calhoun yesterday as was expected. She had been placed in the keeping of her friends, and doubts were expressed as to her insanity.

A COLORED MAN named Mason will be carried before Ordinary Calhoun and a commission de lunatico inquirendo tomorrow morning. The man is believed, by his family and others, to be insane.

YESTERDAY JUDGE CALHOUN was kept busy receiving the final returns of adminstrators, executors, trustees and guardians. Tomorrow is the last day upon which such returns can be rendered.

JUDGE RICHARD H. CLARK will hold court for a few days next week to dispose of the criminal business which still remains on the calendar.

ALL THE COURTHOUSE officials will be in their places a part of tomorrow to discharge such business matters as may be necessary.

In the Justice Courts.

SATURDAY IS QUIET about the justice courts, as a rule, and yesterday was no exception to that rule. Justices Manning and Landrum had nothing, except some minor civil suits. In Justice Tanner's court, Tony Hill and John Head were arraigned upon a charge of receiving stolen goods. They are the negroes who had in their possession a watch supposed to have been stolen from Blue, the Houston street jeweler. They succeeded in proving that they had come by the property honestly, and were discharged.

A SUCCESSFUL VISIT.

Colonel Brandt Secures for a Client the Money Due from the Fidelity Bank.

Colonel Adolph Brandt returned yesterday from Cincinnati, where he has been in the interest of certain Atlanta creditors of the defunct Fidelity bank.

Colonel Brandt secured for the principal Atlanta creditor, the commission house mentioned in yesterday's CONSTITUTION, the $2,500 due by bringing suit against President Briggs Swift, Mr. Zimmerman and other directors of the bank, and attaching their property.

To a CONSTITUTION reporter, Colonel Brandt stated that the Ohio laws are not like those of Georgia in that they do not make it a crime for bank officers to receive money on deposit after they know that the bank is insolvent, or even on the verge of a failure. This point was investigated thoroughly by the best attorneys in Cincinnati and Colonel Brandt found that while the law did not provide for criminal liability and punishment, it gave his cilent a positively safe claim against all the directors and officers of the bank.

The controller of currency says that the other creditors will no doubt get their money due them. but it will probably take some time for the receiver to settle up the bank's affairs. The other Atlanta creditor has taken no action and does not seem to be at all uneasy.

Colonel Brandt expresses the kindliest feelings toward the bank officials of Cincinnati, especially toward Mr. O. H. Tudor, cashier of the Ohio Valley National bank, who was very kind in furnishing some valuable information.

THE FIRM CHANGES.

A Change in an Old and Well Known Firm.

A change has occurred during the past week in the firm of Miller, Brady & Co., the well-known livery men, and the firm will hereafter be Brody & Miller. Mr. John A Miller sells his interest to his brother, Mr. Carlton Miller, who has been connected with the old firm for four years, and is well known in the city as a young man of fine business qualifications. Messrs. Brady & Miller intend that the business shall ke kept up to the high standard of the past, and as their reputation is well known it will be conceded that no change will be required to make either their turnouts more attractive, or their horses more desirable. They have now as always a full line of carriages and buggies. Their Tj cart is one of the finest in the city, and their teams cannot be surpassed. There is no place where customers are treated with more consideration, and if satisfaction is what a man desires he cannot do better than to patronize this firm. Their line of saddle animals is very good, in fact not second to any in the state. Good horses, buggies and carriages will always be furnished on short notice.

Mr. John A. Miller, who has been identified with the old firm, will continue to live in the city, and will retain his interest in the undertaking firm of H. M. Patterson & Co.

THE HORSE GUARD.

The Cavalry Will Parade in Honor of the Glorious Fourth.

The Governor's Horse Guard will have a quarterly parade Monday afternoon.

The company will rendezvous at the usual place at four o'clock, in full uniform. The members will appear for the first time in their new white helmets. It is expected that a large crowd will turn out, as it is one of the four yearly parades that each member is required to attend.

All the arrangements for the encampment at Salt Springs have been completed, and the only thing that is now wanted is for the 16th of July to come. This will be here, in due time, and the Horse Guards will begin its first military encampment. Arrangements have been perfected for the briliant illumination of the camp at night which will add greatly to the comfort and convenience. A brass band will be in constant attendance.

Many Atlanta people will spend the week at Salt Springs, and it is believed that a gay season will be inaugurated in which the Horse Guard will be the central figure.

ATLANTA ARTILLERY.

A National Salute Will be Fired on the Morning of the Fourth.

The Atlanta Artillery will load up its new guns on the 4th of July and fire a national salute of thirty-eight guns. This will be the first time that the Artillery will honor the flag of the union, but it is expected that hereafter the Artillery will regularly observe the day.

Major Jones, the commanding officer of the Artillery desired to fire the salute some distance from the city, in order that no damage would be done to buildings and glass. Major Jones is apprehensive that the window glass in the buildings will be shattered if the salute is fired in the heart of the city.

The police and city officials desire the salute to be fired on the corner of Marietta and Forsyth streets, and it will be fired at that locality provided the property owners will give their consent.

Major Jones addressed a note to each property owner, asking their consent. If their consent is obtained the salute will be fired by the statehouse; if the owners object, the Artillery will go to some place outside the city limits.

In the warm weather you may get all tired out and run down, and affections of the blood may trouble you. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine to give you strength and health

Type-Writer Ink.

The following from the New York Tribune of a recent date will prove interesting:

The recent articles of the Tribune in regard to documents at Washington, prepared by a type-writer, in which the ink either faded or corroded the paper, have created a distinct sensation among the manufacturers and users of these machines.

The matter is of widespread interest. Many wills are prepared with a type-writer, and legal documents are now extensively written with the same machine. There are between 40,000 and 50,000 type-writers in use in this country, aside from the multitude of toy machines. They are used by the largest business houses and corporations, and for the most important writing which is being done. The durability of the work is of high importance, and the desire that these people may know what they may rely upon to give them permanent results has led to a great deal of discussion.

Manufacturers state that the trouble at Washington arose from using inks which were not properly chosen for permanency. It is stated that for writing of contracts, deeds, wills and other legal papers ribbons called black record ribbons should be used. The ink on these ribbons is made from lampblack and is indestructible. For correspondence and any other work from which press copies need to be taken, ribbons which are called indelible copying ribbons should be used. These ribbons give an original proof, which is permanent, and the press copy made from the proof is also permanent. These ribbons have been tested by chemists in this city, who have reported that the work of them will last as long as the paper on which the writing is done; and the examiner of the chemical division of the United States patent office, who recently investigated the subject at the request of the secretary of the treasury, has stated that the work of the record ribbons and the indelible ribbons is permanent in its character, and that papers written on the type-writer with these ribbons have the ink driven into them more deeply by the impact of the machine than though the same ink had been applied with the pen; and that on account of the ink being forced below the surface of the paper it is more difficult to remove it or reach it by chemical agents, and that in this respect it is an advantage over pen work.

The black record ribbons may be found in Atlanta at Mr. W. T. Crenshaw's, "The Remington Headquarters," 2½ Marietta street.

A Card from Mr. English.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 2.—Editors Constitution: The following appears in your columns this morning:

POLICE COMMISSIONER ENGLISH'S VIEWS.

"Whatever Mayor Cooper does in the premises," remarked Captain English, "is right, and, of course, neither I nor any other member of the commission would think of interfering in this matter. I may as well mention that I approve of the mayor's course. The Salvation Army is a nuisance, and it is high time it was suppressed. The scheme which Captain Brucker and Colonel Light seem to be working is to get up a big excitement and take in a good deal of money. But their little game will be blocked."

Please do me the favor to say that your reporter misunderstood me. I did not make use of the language attributed to me. Very respectfully,

J. W. ENGLISH.

A REVOLUTIONARY HERO.

Monument to the Memory of Colonel Ben. Cleveland.

Mr. Varmoy Cleveland was in Atlanta yesterday arranging for an excursion to Ben Cleveland, a station on the Richmond and Danville railroad. Ben. Cleveland was formerly known as Fort Madison, but its name was changed in honor of Colonel Ben. Cleveland, the revolutionary hero. The occasion for the excursion will be the unveiling of a monument to Colonel Ben Cleveland. The unveiling ceremonies will take place some time between the 20th and 30th of the present month. The exact date has not been settled yet. The Hon. R. A. Child, of Pickens county, will deliver the oration. President Cleveland has been requested to be present, and may accept the invitation. The unveiling will undoubtedly be a grand event.

Colonel Ben. Cleveland was the grandfather of Mr. A. C. Wyly and Mr. B. F. Wyly, of this city, and Mrs. Judge John Underwood, of Rome. Elaborate preparations for the event will be made, and doubtless an immense crowd will be in attendance.

THE WASHINGTON SEMINARY.

The Wonderful Growth and Success of a Good School.

The Washington seminary, established a few years ago by Mrs. Baylor Stewart, has grown from a small school to one of the finest seminaries in the south. The new building into which the school had to be moved is situated on Walton street, and is a large and imposing structure. Mrs. Stewart will be assisted this year by a corps of excellent teachers, among whom are Mrs. F. C. Mallon, literature and science; Professor Alfredo Barili, piano and voice culture, and Mr. Orion Frazee, modeling in clay. The seminary is a home and a day school for young ladies and little children, and all who know Mrs. Stewart will cheerfully testify to her extraordinary ability as a teacher and excellent manner in which she conducts her school. It is in fact a model school and one in which every Atlantian is interested.

EDGEWOOD ETCHINGS.

Foster street will give Edgewood a "short haul" to the city.

Edgewood is well supplied with water privileges, creeks, branches and brooks.

Edgewood is to have a new public road running entirely through her center from north to south.

The Mayor of Edgewood is having his fences whitewashed and waxes his moustache. There is no such a Hightower as Edgewood's.

Dr. Binder's grey horse is an honor to the race of horses. He is as steady as clock works, as sober as a judge, and understands the German language.

Pea Vine Sunday-school, organized in the woods June 12, will occupy Lowry's chapel when completed. The school is growing rapidly.

The subject for discussion by the Edgewood debating society: "Who owns the blackberry privileges on the A. D. and S. M. Turnpike's."

The wells in Edgewood supply in abundance pure cold water, and water too that cannot be excelled anywhere. Some of the wells need cleaning out.

During the week Revs. H. C. Morrison and J. W. Lee have preached at Edgewood Methodist church. The meetings will be continued during next week.

Silence reigns supreme in the halls of Moreland Park academy. The boys have gone home and the tutors fled to the lair of the redbug simper to catch fish in Habersham county.

There are six Sunday-schools, and five hundred scholars attending them, in Edgewood district.

Lake Como, at Moreland Park, is a favorite resort for all classes. Nature and art are linked together here to render the spot attractive.

Hon. R. J. Lowry, who is a judge of eligible lots, owns a handsome property in Edgewood. He has given a lot for the erection of a chapel to be used by all denominations, and it will be known as Lowry's chapel. Messrs. C. W. Smith, J. A. Scott and W. J. Houston are the trustees.

The north Georgia Methodist conference regards Edgewood Methodist church as one of the most important churches in the limits of the conference, and the selection of Rev. H. J. Adams for the preacher, was preeminently a wise one. The church is a live one, and is doing a noble work in the community.

DR. WESTMORELAND DENOUNCES SMITH

A Correspondence that Explains Itself—The Beginning of a Long Controversy—Lively Reading.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 2, 1887.—Dr. Willis F. Westmoreland, Atlanta:—My Dear Sir: On the second day of Oct., 1886, you wrote me at my home in Montgomery asking my service in a matter between yourself and Mr. James M. Smith, of Oglethorpe county. I replied consenting to act for you, but the pressing duties incident to my business prevented me from entering upon the matter until later.

On the 25th day of December I left here and went to the home of Mr. Smith, near Winterville, Ga., with the following note which you had written and delivered to me before I left, to be by me delivered to Mr. Smith outside of the limits of the state:

ATLANTA, GA., December 25th, 1886.—James M. Smith, Winterville, Ga.—Sir: For the grievous insult offered me through an interview published by you in THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION under date of the 16th of April last, I demand that full and speedy satisfaction usual among gentlemen.

This will be handed you by my friend Mr. C. H. Williams, who will represent me in the matter of arranging an early meeting between us. Respectfully, W. F. WESTMORELAND.

The character of the above note (being a peremptory challenge) made it necessary for me to deliver it outside of the state of Georgia. Accordingly I had prepared the following note, usual in such cases, and in person delivered it to Mr. Smith.

ATLANTA, Ga., December 25th, 1886.—James M. Smith, Esq.,—Dear Sir: I am the bearer of a communication to you, from Dr. Willis F. Westmoreland, of this city, touching certain charges and statements made by you against him, through the columns of THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION on the 16th of April last. His sickness delayed action on his part until last October, when he wrote me at my home in Montgomery, Ala., requesting me to deliver the said communication. Pressing business engagements delayed me from time to time, and this is my first opportunity to comply with his request.

The communication I bear to you is of such a nature that I prefer to deliver it to you beyond the limits of this state. Will you therefore please designate some place outside of Georgia—any place that suits your convenience—at which place said note can be delivered, and also some friend of yours who is authorized to receive it for you.

I will await your answer to this request for a reasonable time either at Winterville or Athens, Ga., as you may elect. Very respectfully,
C. H. WILLIAMS.

Mr. Smith, after reading the above note, said he had been engaged as Principal in a similar affair, and that under the code he was entitled to time. To this proposition I assented, but insisted upon a formal acknowledgement in writing. He went into his room and after some time returned and handed me the following note, with the remark that it was a busy time of the year with him winding up the business affairs of the year and making new contracts with his hands, and as soon as that was done he would give me a direct answer to my note.

PLEASANT HILL, Ga., December 28, 1886.—C. H. Williams, Esq.—Dear Sir: I am this moment in receipt of a communication from you. Upon consultation with friends and a release from pressing business engagements, I will communicate with you further. Respectfully, JAMES M. SMITH.

After waiting a reasonable time, I addressed him the following note, mailing it in Montgomery on the date it bears:

MONTGOMERY, Ala., February 18, 1887.—James M. Smith, Esq., Winterville, Ga.—Dear Sir: Will you kindly oblige me with an answer to a note handed you last December, touching matters between Dr. Westmoreland and yourself. Your reply to the note at the time, stated that you would communicate with me further on the subject. Very respectfully, C. H. WILLIAMS.

Waiting over a month for a reply, I wrote the following note from Anniston, to which place I had just moved to from Montgomery:

ANNISTON, Ala., March 22, 1887.—James M. Smith, Athens, Ga.—Dear Sir: In a note addressed to me in December last, you promised at an early date you would communicate with me further upon the subject contained in a note I delivered you in reference to a matter pending between Dr. Willis F. Westmoreland and yourself. I beg leave to call your attention to this fact and would be pleased to hear from you. Please address your reply to me at this place. Very respectfully, C. H. WILLIAMS.

Failing to receive a reply, I registered the following note, and I have his receipt showing it was delivered to him.

ANNISTON, Ala., April 25, 1887.—James M. Smith, Winterville, Ga.—Dear Sir: I have written you two letters asking when it would suit your pleasure to give me an answer to a communication delivered by me to you last December and to which you promised an answer touching matters between Dr. Willis Westmoreland and yourself, but have received no reply. I fear the other letters may have miscarried, and I therefore register this one. Will you oblige me with an early acknowledgment of this letter and a reply to the note delivered you last December.

Very respectfully, C. H. WILLIAMS.

Three weeks afterwards I heard from him, and in the following reply he admits receiving the registered letter, as well as one that was not registered:

PLEASANT HILL, Ga., May 13, 1887.—C. H. Williams, Esq., Anniston, Ala.: I have received through the mails a communication from you dated Anniston, Ala., April 25, 1887. About same time I also received through the mails a communication from you dated Anniston, Ala., March 22, 1887, which communication had been misdirected and forwarded.

This correspondence to this point on the subject matter in question, including this note, has been informal and irregular. The delay in answering you has been unavoidable. Trusting the above will be satisfactory, I am yours very respectfully.
JAMES M. SMITH.

I saw nothing irregular in the correspondence, so wrote again, insisting on the main point, towit: "Where I could see him outside of the limits of Georgia, to deliver him a communication from you," as the following letter will show:

ANNISTON, May 21, 1887.—James M. Smith, Winterville, Ga.—Dear Sir: Yours in reply to my registered letter of the 25th of April received. You say the correspondence up to date touching the matter in question is "informal and irregular," to which proposition I beg to dissent. My first letter asked you to name a place outside of the limits of the state of Georgia where I might deliver to you a communication from Dr. Willis F. Westmoreland. Your reply in writing was that you would do so at some future time. That was last December, and my letters since have simply asked that you would comply with that promise. In your letter before me you do not comply with that promise, and I beg again to ask that you name some place at an early date where I can deliver the communication first referred to. Very respectfully,
C. H. WILLIAMS.

I waited a month for a reply, and receiving none, registered the following letter to him, and I hold his receipt given to the postmaster at Winterville for it:

ANNISTON, Ala., June 20, 1887.—James M. Smith, Esq., Winterville, Ga.—Dear Sir: On the 20th of May ult I wrote you again insisting upon a direct answer to my previous letters touching the matter pending between Dr. Willis Westmoreland and yourself, but I have no reply.

I again ask that you comply with your promise to name place outside of the state of Georgia where I can deliver you a written communication from Dr. Westmoreland. I have waited since Dec. 25, 1886, for your answer to this request, and now respectfully insist that you do not further delay this matter. I register this letter that I may be sure you received it.
Very respectfully, C. H. WILLIAMS.

From the above correspondence you will see that I have utterly failed to obtain from Mr. Smith any satisfactory answer to my letter, nor have I been able to get the least intimation as to his willingness to name a place where I could deliver him your note demanding a meeting. I believe it is his deliberate purpose to evade any reply and as far as possible pocket all correspondence on the subject. Having exhausted every effort known in such cases, I have concluded to submit the correspondence to you for such action as you may deem proper and necessary in the matter. Very truly yours,
C. H. WILLIAMS.

To the Public.

I had occasion, in my official capacity as physician of the Georgia penitentiary, to require James M. Smith, of the county of Oglethorpe, to treat humanely and properly the sick convicts under his charge as one of the lessees. What I had to do, and did do is well known to every intelligent citizen of the state. As a revenge for what I made him do, he, on the 16th of last April, together with his hirelings, attacked me in the newspapers. I refrained from taking any public notice of this matter, simply because I thought this man would have the courage to amend a wrong when I gave him an opportunity to seriously think over it, or at least, being brave enough to attack me with a pen, he would have the courage to give me that satisfaction due from one gentleman to another.

The foregoing correspondence shows clearly the character of the man. I have nothing left to do with him but to brand him as a cowardly slanderer, who will not hesitate at a safe distance to abuse a gentleman, and when called to account covers himself with any technicality that is convenient. I denounce this man as wilfully and maliciously issuing and printing slanders on me, and as too cowardly to accord me a meeting. Very respectfully,
WILLIS F. WESTMORELAND.

A MASTER OF TRAINS "CROSSED."

Presentation to Mr. J. J. Kress, Master of Trains, E. T., V. & G. R. R

One of those pleasant surprises which occasionally happen to "good men and true," occurred yesterday evening at the offices of the Georgia division of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia railway.

Mr. Kress having resigned his position as master of trains, although still performing the duties of that office, was presented with a very handsome and valuable Knight-Templar's cross, with the various emblems of intermediate degrees engraved thereon, and bearing inscription, "Presented by conductors E. T., V. & G. Railway."

Mr. Steve Johnson, general agent of the "Queen and Crescent route," made the presentation in his usual happy style, in behalf of the conductors of the Georgia division. Mr. Kress feelingly responded, referring to the pleasant connections about to be severed, and thanking his friends for their faithful co-operation. He felt that, to a great extent, his success depended upon the aid of his friends, and bespoke for his successor the same cordial support which had been accorded him.

Some thirty or more of the employes of the road, including several officers, were present, and after the presentation all united in wishing Mr. Kress success in his new departure, and congratulating him upon the "happy event."

Officers and employes alike express universal regret at the severance of the pleasant relations which have existed between Mr. Kress and themselves, yet rejoice to know that he and family intend making Atlanta their home. Mr. Kress has entered the commission business in connection with Mr. Rushing, under the firm name of Rushing & Kress.

OUR WORKING GIRLS.

Something New That is Giving Them Good Employment.

It is a well-established fact that there is a greater percentage of working girls in Atlanta than in any city south. Dry goods stores, soda fountains, millinery stores, business offices, box factories, printing offices, and nearly every other line demanding light, intelligent help, have, of late years, sought to employ young ladies. This is alike creditable to the business intelligence of Atlanta, and to the pluck of every young woman who thus seeks to make herself independent. They invariably command every possible respect, and are treated as their sex demands.

Yesterday THE CONSTITUTION learned that Mr. Abe Foot had employed a number of girls in his trunk factory, and a reporter called to ask about it.

"Yes," said Mr. Foot, "I have been thinking for some time that I would try to work girls in my trunk factory, and I now find after a few days trial that they are in every way a success."

"Rather odd work for girls, is it not?" asked the reporter.

"No, I hardly think so. There is plenty of light work around a trunk factory, such as lining trunks with paper, cloth or leather, cutting, stitching, etc. They earn good wages, and are satisfied with the work."

"How do they compare with man labor?"

"Just as good every way. They soon learn the art, and I expect to employ a number of others soon. By the way, I am running the largest trunk factory in the south, and turning out such goods as were never shown in Atlanta."

Austell Salt Springs Water—Sold Exclusively by H. C. Beerman.

Convinced that this water is the strongest and best of all the wonderful springs yet discovered and opened at Austell and Salt Springs, Mr. Henry C. Beerman has accepted the exclusive agency for selling it in Atlanta. He will at once fit up a number of wagons to deliver the water fresh every day to families in any part of the city and will solicit orders from consumers. This water is found in a spring about thirty feet deep in granite rock, comes through small crevices and is cold and very salt. It is located at what has for years been known as Buffalo Lick or Deer Lick, where the dirt was so impregnated with salt that these animals licked it away from the roots of trees to such an extent that they have been said to actually fall down for lack of support.

This well known buffalo lick, where the Austell salt spring is located, is within the corporate limits of the north side of Austell and is therefore less than a half mile from the depot.

A temporary pavilion has been erected, and the water can be had with the same facility as at either of the other springs, and the beautiful grove at the spring is a delightful place for a picnic. The proprietors are well known Atlanta gentlemen, and they cordially invite the public to visit the Austell salt springs and try its remarkable waters. They will not be able to erect handsome buildings and beautify their grounds this season, but by next summer they will make the spring and grounds very attractive.

Second Baptist Church.

Dr. McDonald, pastor of the Second Baptist church, who was absent in Kentucky last Sunday, has returned and will preach at his church at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. today. There will no doubt be present at both of these services the usual large attendance. Dr. McDonald continues the evangelistic services, which have become so popular at the Sunday night meetings. The large congregations in attendance greatly enjoy his short but interesting talks at these meetings, also the congregational singing of Moody and Sankey hymns. All seats are free and much of the formality of ordinary church service is dispensed with. All are cordially invited.

The Markham Booming.

Probably not in the history of the hotels of Atlanta has any house jumped into such rapid popular favor as the new Markham. A look over the register will show how the traveling public is appreciating a good thing. Mr. Maxwell has struck the chord, and understands how to cater to our people. His management promises to be brillant and successful to a degree.

The Great Sale of Lots at Austell, Tuesday, July 12th—Round Trip Tickets 25 Cents.

Sam'l W. Goode & Co. are preparing plats for another great sale of lots at Austell, on the 12th day of July. Excursion trains with very low rates, from Rome and intermediate points to Austell, and from Macon and intermediate points to Austell, have been arranged, while the rates from Atlanta on a round trip ticket will be only 25 cents. Tickets will be on sale July 11th and 12th, good returning July 13th. A great many picnic parties are being made up in all parts of Atlanta, and many ladies and children will go. The Clinthia Division No. 2 of the Knights of Pythias with their families, Mr. Henry C. Beerman, captain, will attend the sale in a body, and picnic at the Austell Salt Springs by special invitation of the proprietors; dinner will be served at the Salt Springs hotel for 50 cents, or parties can take their lunches with them, if they prefer. The sale will be on the shaded tract between the depot and the pavilions over the Austell Lithia and Bowden Lithia springs; a band of music will be in attendance, and no doubt the bidding for lots will be very spirited. Lots are being disposed of daily at private sale, and the hotels and boarding houses are crowded with visitors. The lots to be sold are shaded and most eligibly located between the springs and depot and near the car line. Such a day of pleasure and profit is rarely offered Atlanta people, and hundreds of them will invest in a round trip ticket for only 25 cents, and in a choice lot on the 12th of July.

To the Public.

We, the undersigned ladies of J. M. High's millinery department do hereby assert that the publication in the Evening Capitol of a few days since was very unjust to Mr. Scott and entirely void of truth in regard to his treatment of the ladies in his charge.

Mr. Scott has always treated us kindly and politely and to our certain knowledge has never insulted a lady in his employ since we have been connected with the house, and some of us have been here ever since the department was opened. We do this to exonerate Mr. Scott from the unjust comments that have been passed upon him.

One of the greatest draw... to southern resorts is the lack of first-clas... commodations. This, unfortunately, is ... rule and not the exception. I am glad ... note, however, that we are gradually com... out of our old methods, and that Murray ... is sufficient inducement to keep our people ... home. Just why Atlanta and all Georgia ... not pour down here in a solid stream the wh... summer is a little strange, but due, perh... to the meager knowledge they have of ... beach and its attractions.

DOWN BY THE SEA.

Pablo Beach, Florida, and Beautiful "Murray Hall" Hotel.

THE FINEST BEACH IN THE WORLD.

The Charm of Surf Bathing, Surf Fishing, Driving, Boating, Etc.—A Magnificent New Hotel and Its Attractions.

PABLO BEACH, Fla., July 1.—[Special Correspondence of The Constitution.]—The other day in Atlanta, when I heard Dr. Nicholson enthusing over Pablo Beach and Murray hall, the grand hotel here, I resolved to take a run down to the sea and look for myself. It was just what I needed, and I find that Dr. Nicholson cannot, nor can any one else, exaggerate the beauty of this spot. Such air is just what we all need every once in a while, but the sea is a "mighty heap" sweeter when one can come to a point like this and not have to "rough it." Somehow or other, or somehow else, comfort is a most desirable thing to have around under almost any considerations, and if a man cannot get just everything here, I don't know where he could find it. One of the greatest drawbacks to southern resorts is the lack of first-class accommodations. This, unfortunately, is the rule and not the exception. I am glad to note, however, that we are gradually coming out of our old methods, and that Murry hall is sufficient inducement to keep our people at home. Just why Atlanta and all Georgia do not pour down here in a solid stream the whole summer is a little strange, but due, perhaps, to the meager knowledge they have of the beach and its attractions.

It is an easy matter now to leave Atlanta in the evening and breakfast at Pablo beach the next morning. Or, say leave Saturday afternoon, you arrive Sunday morning and get back to business Monday morning. Very quick work that, you will say. Well the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia people are not doing things by halves now on their line, and they send you from Atlanta here and back for $7.50.

But you are wanting to know the attractions of Pablo beach, and I hasten to tell the story. It is reached by rail from Jacksonville in a forty minute run, and is thirty-three miles from St. Augustine. The beach is 700 feet wide at low tide, and is said to be the finest on the Atlantic coast. It is as hard as a floor, and extends just this way all the distance to St. Augustine. With a good team nothing is more exhilerating than spinning along toward the old city over Pablo beach in the early morning, returning with ease the same evening. At high tide the beach is still from 150 to 200 feet wide, so there is no end to plenty of beach, either for driving, bicycling, or promenading. There are no holes or indentures anywhere making it perfectly safe for bathing. There is no undertow either, an ocean dread that keeps many timid people out of the water. And the surf fishing! Ah, this is where the land lubber loses himself. Imagine an Atlantian casting a line in sight of Murray hall and pulling out a forty pound sea bass. That's what can be done here any day in the week, except Sunday. This surf fishing is excellent, and forms one of the charms of Pablo. Mr. Christopher, mine host of Murray hall, keeps two men on monthly salaries, who do nothing but fish for the hotel table. There are no fresh water streams around, so that you get here the pure salt of the briny deep unadulterated. And another beauty about coming down here is that you don't have to melt after you arrive, nor are you eaten bodily by mosquitoes and sand flies. They don't live in this climate, Mr. Christopher says he has seldom had to use a net during any summer.

This is but a meagre mention of Pablo. I do not question any man's right to call it the finest beach in America, if not in the world, and never a soul has seen it without growing enthusiastic over its many charms. But there needs must be something else than good beach and good fishing. It is well enough to camp out when you are in a camping mood; but when you don't feel that way, the satisfaction of having a good hotel is worth a lot—corner lot—if you will.

is one of the most superbly appointed hotels in the country. It has 190 rooms, and cost $175,-000. It would have cost $225,000 outside of Florida. The house is built in the shape of a T, the main structure being 380 feet long, 4 stories high, with a central tower 60 feet square rising seven stories above the ground. There is a floor space covering 91,200 square feet in the entire building, or over two acres, besides a half mile of broad verandas, from 15 to 40 feet wide. Every room in the house opens on a verand and also all on an interior hall, so that all are outside rooms, each one having double doors of wire guaze and solid wood. A fine otis elevater is kept running all the time, and the general appointments of the hotel are elegant. The interior is finished in native land woods, cherry, oak ash, maple and Georgia pine, being the material use. The furniture throughout is as good as any to be found in the very best hotels north. Every room is connected with the office by electric bells, with fine alarm attachment, and there is enough water and hose through the building to flood it in two minutes. Hot and and cold baths, also, are on every floor, the water being impregnated with sulphur, obtained from an eight inch artesian well on the premises. This water is highly beneficial for rheumatism and dyspepsia and is recommended by the best physicians. The artesian well is nearly 500 feet deep, and is the largest in Florida, flowing 3,000,000 gallons daily.

Mr. Christopher runs in connection with Murray hall a forty acre farm, on which he has between thirty and forty registered Jerseys, supplying the purest rich milk and butter. He also raises his own hogs and supplies his own veal, mutton and vegetables. His beef he gets direct from New York in refrigerators. During the winter season the daily rate is $4.00, but in order to induce up-the-country people to come down now, the price has been reduced to $2.50 and $3.00 a day, or by the week as low as $10.00 to $14.00. "And," remarked Mr. Christopher, "I am serving exactly the same fare as during the winter when the rate is $4.00 a day."

A full and complete orchestra is engaged the year through, and nothing could be more charming than gliding through the merry mazes of the waltz or lances these lonely moonlight nights, with the orchestra strains on the broad piazza supplemented by the noble music of incoming and retiring waves on the beach. It is all a grand symphony, and one must come down here to understand why it would be impossible for me to overdraw the picture. That Pablo is the coming seaside resort seems to be a matter of fact as soon as its attraction are well enough known. The thermometer seldom gets above 90 degrees, and there is almost constantly a breeze blowing from the sea. The only disagreeable moments one can possibly have here is when a land breeze comes up, and these do not last long, and are not at all frequent. The ocean view from the broad verandas is magnificent, and as sails are ever in sight, there seems to be little or no monotony. One is lulled to sleep every night by the music of the waves, and this sulphur water and salt air give one an appetite that is amazing. There are large crowds here every Saturday, Sunday and Monday, while during the week there are enough people at the hotel to keep things lively. Next Monday all this part of the country will be down here to celebrate the glorious Fourth at Pablo. Last Sunday there were 500 guests here.

Bonds, Stocks and Money.

CONSTITUTION OFFICE,
ATLANTA, July 2, 1887.

All stocks and bonds upon which interest and dividends are payable July 1 are quoted ex, those items. The extreme stringency in New York and other financial centers has, for the time being, very greatly retarded investment business. This stringency has an artificial look, though it may be natural. There is always a short period immediately preceding semi-annual settlement days in our country when it is necessary for banks and other depositories to accumulate money for the use of corporations in meeting their interest and dividend charges, but this period passes and the money thus disbursed soon reaches trade channels and relieves the situation. In the present emergency it looks as if some one interested in seeing lower prices for stocks—speculative stocks, we mean—had locked up money in order to keep it out of the reach of legitimate borrowers, as well as speculators who desire to induce a rise. Be this as it may, all the manipulation that can be done will not affect the supply of available funds much longer, because the interest and dividend payments now being made amount to a vast sum—largely over 100 million dollars—and this will at once seek investment in temporary loans or securities. As far as now known there has not been a single instance of default in promptly meeting July payments, and this speaks favorably of the business prosperity abroad in our land. Of the general prosperity, our southern railroads are partaking very freely, the development in the south giving them a large traffic in both freight and passengers. There are 1,000 men now engaged in grading the Atlanta and Hawkinsville road, and the force will be augmented as rapidly as possible, it being the desire and purpose of the company to have the first division—Atlanta to Fort Valley—in operation by January 1, 1888. By the middle of the month track-laying will begin, and with the start ahead the grading force has, the track gang will have steady employment.

The Georgia Midland is now receiving business between Columbus and Griffin, and is pushing its rails along rapidly toward McDonough.

New York exchange buying at par and selling at ¼ premium.

How Amasa Got on His Feet.

By Richard H. Roe.

From Harper's Weekly.

Amasa Snow sat in his little law office, his feet on the top rim of his stove, and his stove full of wood, and red hot. His office was about a rod from his house, and quite near the high wooden gate leading into the village street. Over the door one read, "Prothonotory and Attorney-at-law." It was a huge, faded sign in black letters; one could not go by Amasa Snow's office and not know of the business of its occupant. The trouble with the sign was it was not alluring enough. Squire Slayton, down the street, with a very small sign and over a grocery store, and without a big wide house, a family name and connection—Squire Slayton somehow got all the business there was going in East Chesterville.

Amasa Snow sat tilted back in his wooden arm-chair, pulling his long chin beard, scratching the few gray hairs in his sloping gray head, and trying to conjure up some new scheme by which he could beat Slayton again, and defer the foreclosure sale. He had deferred it five times on one excuse and another; but Slayton had him this time; there was no help for it. The old place would have to be sold—the old place where his boyhood had been passed until he went away to college, and where he had lived ever since, and seen his six girls grow up about him. His six girls!

He reached down and broke a splinter off a bit of pine wood by the stove, and began to chew hard on it. What would become of the girls? Every one a beauty in his eyes; every one worthy of marrying the governor of the state. How could he tell that the sale of their old home could be postponed no longer; that every device and trick, and every legal quibble, had been tried and tried again? He dared not tell the girls. He looked out of the window; it was raining. An April shower, to be sure, with a prospect of a golden sunset later on, but making everything outside under the trees look very muddy and dismal. Amasa Snow felt very much depressed. Fate appeared to be What was to be done? He had borrowed from every one in the town. He could borrow no longer. If the old place were sold at twice its value it would not pay his debts. He had lived well, and his six motherless girls had never known how poor he was. "O," he groaned, as he rose and stood with his back to that hot stove—"O, how can I get on my feet?"

There was his law books—a couple of thousand dingy calf volumes, not kept up to date, the inheritance from the judge, his father, but even the law books were 'chatteled,' as they said, i. e., mortgaged quite beyond their value. Everything he had, in fact, was mortgaged. He had come this wet April day to the end of things. Next week came the sale. He felt like saying—the deluge. He had not enough money to take him and his family out west.

That was his plan—to go west. He hardly felt his fifty years. He felt young and energetic when he thought of the west. By-the-way, there was his brother, Elisha—his brother who in his youth was so like him. He was west, in California. He had not seen him for twenty years. The last he had heard from him was a request to send on a hundred dollars. That was five years ago. He had sent him fifty, and nothing had been heard since, except his name endorsed across the back of the check, showing that he had received the money.

No, it was clear that Elisha could never help him. Elisha had caused him to lose several thousand dollars once in a mine. Elisha's name was always a great bugbear in his family since. No, Elisha could not be expected to help him. Stay! An idea. Amasa Snow began to poke the red-hot fire vigorously. It was a bleak raw day, but the fire was hot enough in that little office if left alone. An idea. Elisha should be made to help him. It was a last hope, but it fired him with enthusiasm. He reached up into a dusty book-case and got down a file of letters. He was looking for Elisha's address.

Just then there came a tap at the office door. Amasa turned around. "By thunder!" he cried, nearly carried off his feet with astonishment. "It's Elisha—in propria persona!"

"I have come home," said Elisha, meekly. "I have come—to neigbor round."

"And just in the nick of time, Elisha. Mighty glad I am to see you!" Then a thought occurred to him, as he shook his brother's hand, with that feeble wave in the air so common in southern Connecticut, he would not tell Elisha of his financial condition. He might not help him if he did. No, he would keep his own counsel.

The two brothers sat down by the stove, and Amasa threw another stick of soft pine wood on the fire. It was frightfully hot. "See here, Elisha," he said, after a pause. "How's the Grand American Eagle a-doin'?"

"She isn't a-doin'."

"Nothin' at all?"

"No; hasn't been for ten years."

"It was a splendid mine once, Elisha. You used to say so."

"So it was. But we struck hard-pan—you remember about it. What's the use of rakin' over old personalities at this time, when I ought to be received with open arms, and a bonfire lighted and fire-works touched off?"

"I know, I know," replied Amasa, apologetically. "I ought to ask how you have happened on east this way."

"Why, yes; you ought to show some brotherly feeling. It's natural."

"Well, Elisha, have you any ready money in your pockets?"

"A thousand dollars."

Amasa walked over to his old rusty safe.

"Better put the money in here?" he asked, casually. Elisha handed him a roll of bills, "Don't feel like payin' back any of that two thousand?" asked Amasa, facetiously, referring to the loan he had made in the mining scheme.

"No" said Elisha, "I don't." After a pause, while his brother locked the safe, he said, "That thousand is the last cent I've got in the world."

"Glad you've come home. Glad you've come to live to live with me," said Amasa, rubbing hishands. "The girls will be so happy to see you. Come, let's go in the house."

He slipped an old, well-worn overcoat over his shoulders without buttoning it, and they went out into the rain. Elisha was very well dressed. Any one would have taken him for a well-to-do western bank president. He looked sleek and well fed. There wasn't a trace of anxiety about his face. Otherwise the brothers looked very much alike.

As they were crossing the threshold of the house, Amasa whispered, "Just tell the girls you're a millionaire; for a joke, you know."

Elisha winked. "Yes," he said, "for a joke—wish I was, though," and they entered the parlor. There were the six girls; six good-looking, hearty, frank, healthy country girls. They all rose, and gave a veritable shout of welcome. They usually gave a united shout whenever anything pleased them. They fairly screamed when Elisha opened the door. They flew at him. They kissed him. They took his hat for him; they took away his overcoat and umbrella. And how they were impressed when their father said, proudly, "And then to think that your uncle has returned to us a millionaire!"

"A millionaire!—really?" choroused the girls.

Elisha began to feel his old boastful spirit, for which he had long been noted, coming over him again. "Why," he said, "out in California we don't reckon a million much money. All my friends are worth over a million. My five million dollars don't count very much out there."

"Elisha says he is going to build a public library building for east Chesterville," put in Amasa, without a grimace.

"A public library!" chorous the girls.

"He says he don't mind paying off the debt on the church either," added their prevaricator of a father.

"How perfectly splendid!"

"No one would have thought the Grand American Spread-eagle Mine would have panned out so well," said Amasa.

By this time the six girls were dancing around the room in their excitement. They had not been so excited since John Mawley, the son of Mawley the mill-owner at the other end of the village, had become engaged to Bessie Snow, their eldest sister—said Mawley having concluded, on the consent and advice of his father, to break off said engagement, after knowledge of Lawyer Snow's financial condition came out and be came common gossip.

"Elisha says the Sunday-school shall have a new organ if it takes his last cent," said their father, laughing heartily. He could not hold himself in.

"Well," said Elisha, "not quite as bad as that. But they shall have a new melodeon—yes."

This capped the climax. The Sunday-school had been holding picnics, strawberry festivals, ice-cream festivals, lectures, busy-bees, and I don't know what besides—in which the six girls had taken a lively interest—to raise money enough for an organ; but, do their best, they could raise only about fifty dollars. They threw themselves upon their uncle, and as there was not quite enough of him to go around, they threw themselves upon their father. It was a touching scene. Two of the girls were in tears, and one of them was heard to say. "Our deliverer!"

And there in the midst stood the two old hypocrites laughing as heartily as the rest—only—only in Amasa Snow's eyes there glistened some real tears. Poor man! how he wished it was all true! For he loved his girls beyond everything on earth, and their happiness and joy unnerved him for his little scheme. If it should fail, how should he dare look them in the face again?

Suddenly Bessie looked up. "It's late," she said—"it's dreadful late for the sewing society!"

When they were alone Elisha said: "You've done it!—you've gone and done it! In five minutes every word of what we've said will be all over this village. Yes, and all the state of Connecticut. Dun it! I say, Amasa, this isn't right!"

"Why? Don't you have any fears. Suppose they do tell of your millions; it will give you credit."

"Ah, yes, yes! but they will be after me for my money." Elisha straightened himself up very stiffly, and buttoned his coat over his chest very firmly, as if to impress on his brother the fact that he wouldn't let them have a cent—not one cent—if they did.

"Well, don't say it isn't so, any way," whispered Amasa, and led Elisha to his room, where that great and good philanthropist and millionaire lay down upon a sofa and took a comfortable nap.

For a week east Chesterville was in a condition of ferment. The resurrection of Elisha Snow in the form of a millionaire, after having departed twenty years before with a reputation for unconquerable laziness, and an ability only remarkable for imbibing hard cider, was enough to shake the entire county to its center. Then his magnificent bequests—the town library building, the new organ, raising the minister's salary, proposing to establish a Home for Incurable Idiots—for poor Elisha found he could not stop promising when he had once begun, and his plan to build a new gymnasium, skating rink, winter bath, all combined, for the young people, made him at once the idol of the town.

Mawley, the mill-owner, met Amasa one day in the street. "See here," he said, "I've told Slayton to let up on you. You and I were always old friends. Pay up the interest on that mortgage any time you please. By the way, I'm tired of Slayton. He's hounded you, when you were down, in a darned mean way. I'm sick of Slayton. I'll send you round a retainer tomorrow of five hundred dollars in a case I've got against some Providence people. Big case—big money in it. How's your brother—pretty well, I hope. Those California magnates are all coming east, I hear. Think your brother would like to put any money in my mill? A big chance now. I don't need the money, but it don't pay to keep all your eggs in one basket. How's Bessie? Good morning."

"Mr. Mawley, one moment. You don't let up on me and send me this lawsuit because Elisha is a millionaire, do you?"

"O, no, no, no!! My dear fellow, no, no! Why, what an idea! By-the-way, I never favored the breaking off of that match—my son and Bessie. Good-day."

Amasa Snow got round behind the fence, and laughed and shook until the entire fence laughed and shook with him. His little scheme was working well. One needs very little capital in this world if one can only obtain its substitute—credit. That week and the next he had retainers sent him from several wealthy proprietors in a neighboring manufacturing town. He had the foreclosure suit discontinued, paid Mawley his interest, got his mortgage extended indefinitely. What is more, his business picked up so that he paid a large sum on account all around among the creditors. They all said, "Elisha is doing it for him." He painted and refurnished the old Snow house. He ran slightly into debt in doing it, but his girls had some new clothes sent them from New York. He donned a new suit of broadcloth, and—he was happy. He was on hisfeet. Slayton was utterly nonplussed. In vain the wily practitioner went about spreading doubts as to Elisha's having any money whatever. "Why don't he buy that organ?" he kept saying, until people began to wonder why indeed.

As soon as the rumor spread about that Elisha was childless, and that he intended leaving his money in equal shares to his six nieces, they went off literally like hot cakes. Mawley junior, who really loved the girl, married Bessie, and then they were all married off in batches of two, until the youngest refused to marry at all, saying, with her finger at her lip, "she preferred to stay with her father."

In one year all this happened. Amasa Snow was now a successful man—his debts paid and his practice increasing. One day the rumor reached him—why had not Elisha paid for the organ?

Hewent to Elisha. "It,s time, he said, "for you to disappear."

"I'm very contented here," protested Elisha, "reading the newspapers and sitting in the hotel. It agrees with me. I don't want to disappear."

He liked the adulation extended to him on the ground that he was a millionaire. He played the easy, well-fed, rich plutocrat revisiting his New England home to perfection. His acting was consummate, because it was nature itself, without a mirror being held up to it. He had just that amount of narrowness, of close-fistedness, of sagacious doubt as to the motives of men who approached him with schemes for investment; he acted the millionaire to perfection, and he never overdid it.

"Amasa, I can't go," he said. "They think I'm such a good man to make money. They have actually brought money to me to make more for them. Yes, I've received over $50,000 for investment within the last month."

"Thunder and guns!" exclaimed Amasa. "This is dreadful! I see state prison yawning before us!"

"It's just what the Grand American Spread-eagle Mine needs," said Elisha, swelling himself out—"a little money."

"Well, take the money and go, then—go! I will have nothing to do with this—nothing!"

Amasa was very angry. He resolved to be responsible for his brother no longer. He went to his daughters, all but one now well married and in happy, well-to-do homes. "Your uncle and I have had a row," he said. "He is going back to California."

"And the organ, the new library, the gymnasium?"

"Well, he is mad about something. He says the town has slighted him. But one thing must be understood, whatever he does, I wash my hands of him forever!"

Elisha did leave a few days after. He took away obout a hundred thousand dollars of widows and orphans' funds, went to San Francisco, put his money into various enterprises, paid the beneficiaries 8 per cent interest, was honest as the day, and died a few years ago worth a great deal of money, which he left, share and share alike, to his brother's six girls, and he left a thousand dollars for the new organ.

Amasa still lives—a fairly well-to-do old country lawyer—slightly in debt still, in east Chesterville. But he is the adored grandpapa of twelve of the dearest little grandchildren, and he often says to them benignly, "Children, I have put you all—and myself—on our feet. Yes, but I had to tell your mothers an awful lie!"

"What was the lie, grandpopper?"

"I had to say the laziest man alive—your grand-uncle, children—I had to say the penniless old rascal—your grandfather's brother, my dears, who had robbed me of all I had in one of his confounded mines, the Great American Spread-eagle Gold and Silver—I had to say, and stan' to it, that he was one of the biggest millionaires on the Pacific coast! But that lie has put us all on our feet!"

SOCIETY SALAD.

Events of the Week on the Social Side of Life.

A NUMBER OF PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS

In the Clubs, in the Parlors and on the Lawns—Excursions and Dinings—Weddings and Rumors of Coming Events.

Social circles have never been duller than during the past week. Several of the social favorites have left for the summer, and those who have not are making preparations to do so. Athens has attracted a large number of Atlantians to the commencement, and this, together with the fact that it is growing too hot for brilliant entertainments, made the week unusually dull. There are few indications of a renewal of the season, and in all probability the present dullness will continue through the entire summer.

Occasionally—not every day, but now and then—the wayfaring news man who handles the material contained in this column, has stumbled across little works of genius which, emanating from other sources, where fame has already begun the weaving of a crown of laurel, would form a rich leaf in the chaplet of glory. The other day, in a little room occupied by a gentleman who is now making Atlanta his home, following the art of watchmaking, a CONSTITUTION man saw two small oil paintings that were veritable gems. They were the work of Mr. W. S. Langheim, and were made from pencil sketches drawn a few years ago, in Arizona. In the leisure moments, and simply as a matter of recreation, Mr. Langheim took up his palette and brush and began putting life and reality on a small bit of canvas tacked upon the wall of his room. An hour's work today, two hour's another time, put before the artist—for he is an artist, of the true type—two pictures, which, in their general expressiveness, tone, technique and color would do ample credit to an artist who made landscape work his life purpose. Mr. Langheim has combined, in one of these pictures, an Arizona sunset, all that could suggest distance, the transparent atmosphere of that beautiful and picturesque country, exquisite foliage in the foreground and withal such a massing of color without being painful in detail, that makes him wonder why he does not immortalize his name with a brush, rather than live in obscurity over a watchmaker's bench. But there is compensation in all things, if the poets can be believed, and it is some consolation to know that if Mr. Langheim cannot breathe the inspiration of genius into a landscape he can, also, get that poetry of motion and perfection of mechanical effects from the merry-go-round works of a watch.

The marriage of Mr. Frank I. McDonald, of Darien, to Miss Ida Palmer, of Edgewood, Tuesday evening, was a brilliant affair. The ceremony was performed in the Edgewood Methodist church, by Rev. Dr. Strickler, in an impressive and beautiful manner. The church was beautifully decorated with the choicest flowers, there being numerous arches under which the bride and groom passed. The floral gates were opened by two little girls, Misses Alma Henllerson and Annie Hayney. The attendants were:

Mr. Hamp Howard and Miss Lula Brooks, Mr. Robert Mell and Miss Lillie Akers, Mr. Clifford May and Miss Laura Mell, Mr. Ed McDonald and Miss Mary Withers.

A reception was given the party by Mr. J. P. McDonald, brother of the groom. The evening was spent in the happiest manner by all present until 1 o'clock, when Mr. and Mrs. McDonald departed for their future home, Darien, Ga.

The groom is a young man of fine business qualifications, and is a prominent citizen of Darien. The bride is a beautiful young lady, and a great favorite with all.

Miss Olivia Macey's music class gave their annual exhibition at her father's residence, corner Calhoun and Pine, Friday evening. Parents and friends of the class were delighted at the progress made under Miss Macey's instructions, and the large audience was well entertained with vocal and instrumental music and recitations. Miss Sallie Shelverton was given the medal for improvement, and Miss Maggie Adams for industry. The medals were very fine and were given by Miss Macey. They were presented by Rev. M. H. Dillard. A speech from Mr. Ed. Frazer was a pleasant feature of the evening.

One of the social and musical events of the week occurred on Thursday evening at the hall of the Atlanta Musical association, where Mrs. Hanna and her pupils, assisted by Mrs. H. M. Clark, Miss A. H. Hanna, Professor Clarke and Mr. Samuel Bradley, gave a musical reception to her many friends and patrons. The progress of this class, especially in concerted music, has been wonderful, and speaks volumes for the skill and fidelity of the teacher. The numbers were carefully selected and rendered with a grace, fire and expression remarkable in all, but especially on account of their tender years, in the younger pupils. The Creole lover's song was sung by Miss Hanna with great taste and feeling. The gem of the evening was Gounod's Ave Maria, Mrs. H. M. Clark, soprano, with accompaniment of piano, organ and violin.

One of the pleasantest events of the week was the reception given Friday evening by Miss Mary Cook, at her home on Peachtree street. The yard was beautifully illuminated with Japanese lanterns. A large number called during the evening and the reception proved a very enjoyable one. At eleven o'clock refreshments were served. Miss Cook made a charming hostess, and was untiring in her kind attention to her guests. Among those present were: Miss Mary Cook, Miss Minnie Mayo, Miss Carrie Fowler, Miss Jim Wylie, Miss Emma Stewart, Macon; Miss Yancey, Birmingham; Miss Lovejoy, Miss Emie Burr, Macon; Miss Annie Bostwick, Miss Cause, Miss Courtney, Miss, McDonald, Cuthbert; Miss Monroe, Fla; and Messrs. On last Sunday evening at five o'clock, at the residence of Dr. J. W. Lee, Mr. W. A. Hancock was united in marriage to Miss Merta Koplin, of Springfield, Ohio. Miss Koplin was on a visit to her brother, Mr. C. E. Seaman, of this city, when she met Mr. Hancock. They left immediately for Cumberland Island, where they will spend several weeks and will then go to Springfield, Ohio, on a visit to the relatives of the bride. Mr. Hancock is one of Atlanta's most promising young business men and is a member of the firm of Hancock & Co., Mitchell street, and is also a partner in the firm of Spencer & Hancock, Whitehall street. Miss Koplin, while she has not been long in Atlanta, has, by her attractive manner and lovable disposition, endeared herself to all who have met her. The many friends of the young couple wish them all the happiness that the future can possibly have in store for them.

At the concert of Miss Olivia Macy's music class, at Miss Macy's residence, on Pine street, Friday night, medals were awarded as follows: Miss Sallie Shelverton, for improvement; Miss Maggie Adams, for industry, and Willie Shelverton and Miss Flora Langston, honorable mention. The programme, occupied an hour and a half and was splendidly rendered. There was a large attendance and the concert was enjoyed by all.

SOCIETY SALAD.

Events of the Week on the Social Side of Life.

A NUMBER OF PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS.

At the Clubs, in the Parlors and on the Lawns—Excursions and Dinings—Weddings and Rumors of Coming Events.

Social circles have never been duller than during the past week. Several of the social favorites have left for the summer, and those who have not gone are making preparations to do so. Athens also attracted a large number or Atlantians to the commencement, and this, together with the fact that it is growing too hot for brilliant entertainments, made the week unusually dull. There are few indications of a renewal of the season, and in all probability the present dullness will continue through the entire summer.

Occasionally—not every day, but now and then—the wayfaring news man who handles the matter contained in this column, has stumbled across little works of genius which, emanating from other sources, where fame has already begun the weaving of a crown of laurel, would form a rich leaf in the chaplet of glory. The other day, in a little room occupied by a gentleman who is now making Atlanta his home, following the art of watchmaking, a CONSTITUTION man saw two small oil paintings that were veritable gems. They were the work of Mr. W. S. Langheim, and were made from pencil sketches drawn a few years ago, in Arizona. During his leisure moments, and simply as a matter of recreation, Mr. Langheim took up his pallette and brush and began putting life and reality on a small bit of canvas tacked upon the wall of his room. An hour's work today, two hour's another time, put before the artist—for he is an artist, of the true type—two pictures, which, in their general expressiveness, tone, technique and color would do ample credit to an artist who made landscape work his life purpose. Mr. Langheim has combined, in one of these pictures, an Arizona sunset, all that could suggest distance, the transparent atmosphere of that beautiful and picturesque country, exquisite foliage in the foreground and withal such a massing of color, without being painful in detail, that makes one wonder why he does not immortalize his name with a brush, rather than live in obscurity over a watchmaker's bench. But there is compensation in all things, if the poets can be believed, and it is some consolation to know that if Mr. Langheim can breathe the inspiration of genius into a landscape he can, also, get that poetry of motion and perfection of mechanical effects from the merry-go-'round works of a waten.

The marriage of Mr. Frank I. McDonald, of Darien, to Miss Ida Palmer, of Edgewood, Tuesday evening, was a brilliant affair. The ceremony was performed in the Edgewood Methodist church, by Rev. Dr. Strickler, in an impressive and beautiful manner. The church was beautifully decorated with the choicest flowers, there being numerous arches under which the bride and groom passed. The floral gates were opened by two little girls, Misses Alma Henderson and Annie Hayney. The attendants were:

Mr. Hamp Howard and Miss Lula Brooks, Mr. Robert Mell and Miss Lillie Akers, Mr. Clifford Mayson and Miss Laura Mell, Mr. Ed McDonald and Miss Mary Withers.

A reception was given the party by Mr. J. P. McDonald, brother of the groom. The evening was spent in the happiest manner by all present until 11 o'clock, when Mr. and Mrs. McDonald departed to their future home, Darien, Ga.

The groom is a young man of fine business qualifications, and is a prominent citizen of Darien. The bride is a beautiful young lady, and a great favorite with all.

One of the social and musical events of the week occurred on Thursday evening at the hall of the Atlanta Musical association, where Mrs. Hanna and her pupils, assisted by Mrs. H. M. Clark, Miss B. H. Hanna, Professor Clarke and Mr. Samuel Bradley, gave a musical reception to her many friends and patrons. The progress of this class, especially in concerted music, has been wonderful, and speaks volumes for the skill and fidelity of the teacher. The numbers were carefully selected and rendered with a grace, fire and expression remarkable in all, but especially on account of their tender years, in the younger pupils. The Creole lover's song was sung by Miss Hanna with great taste and feeling. The gem of the evening was Gounod's Ave Maria, Mrs. H. M. Clark, soprano, with accompaniment of piano, organ and violin.

THROUGH THE STATE.

What the Society People of Georgia Have Been and Contemplate Doing.

Athens.

The late commencement of the Lucy Cobb institute made a new departure in respect to some of the old routine methods in the exercises of such occasions. In lieu of the antiquated monotony of compositions, readings and recitations, there was on Monday, or "Longfellow Day," on which a sketch of the poet's life and literary career was given, followed by such illustrations of his poems, and especially of his Evangeline and Hiawatha, as far as adopted to sophomores. Of course there was the mere germ of critical insight, but it was pleasant to note even the rudiments of taste and cultivation in the young critics. Following this was the elocutionary contest for the gold medal in the primary class, in which several of the contestants showed an innate capacity for this sort of early education that was quite noticeable. At night, the class in calisthenics, taught so finely through the year by Miss Paulin, gave a very attractive exhibition; and I could not but observe the rhythmic effect of muscular education in the oratorical grace and precision of gesture which was subsequently so manifest in the elocution of the advanced students.

This was followed by the children's play, gotten up by Miss Robertson, whose success in the management of the primaries is as gratifying to her many friends as was the first honor of her class received a year ago at her graduation.

Tuesday had been set apart as the "Dickens Day" for the junior exhibition. Not only was the literary art of Dickens, the man of genius, aptly brought into view, but the spirit of the friend and lover of young people and the exuberance of joyousness in their company vitalized the occasion. The hearty sympathy with which the performers entered into the various characters and the vivid naturalness embodied in look, soul and manner, were remirrored in the delight of a most appreciative audience. Miss Nellie Inman, Miss Maud Barker, Miss Effie Howell, Miss Cornelia Jackson were greatly admired for the taste and skill they evinced in the parts allotted to them. But the happiest hit of the hour was the Pickwick trial, and with it closed this entertaining occasion.

At night the chapel was again crowded to enjoy the concert. The classes of Miss Powell and Miss Mell, the accomplished teachers in this department, demonstrated the wisdom of the institution in engaging the services of these highly educated ladies for this popular branch of elegant culture. The testimony of the best judges of music was that the concert was exceptionally fine. Here, as everywhere, our women are shaping a sound public opinion as to their native capacity and cultured ability for the highest positions in art and sience, and, in this sphere of her labors, the Lucy Cobb is doing her share to solve one of the problems of the age. And her success is of the most gratifying kind. Quite as noticeable was the progress made by Mrs. M. A. Lipscomb's advanced classes in elocution in the contest on Wednesday for the gold medal of this attractive department. As before stated, the utility of the calisthenic muscular training, to give strength and grace to the body, is most happily supplemented by the art of vocal culture; the art in which soul and body have their most beautiful and expressive union and combine in fullest harmony the perfection of communicative and embellishing talent.

A short recess followed, and then came the alumnæ address by Miss Florrie Carr, marked by most practical thought, perspicuous, pungent, surcharged with nervous force and admirably condensed. The banquet of the alumnæ was next in order, and for two hours the ladies enjoyed themselves in their private hall in the fellowship that renewed pleasant memories, touched the pictures of the past with the freshening tints of recent scenes, beautifying the fugitive festal movements with the charms of fluent talk interspersed with poetry and music. Another noon arose upon that noon.

Reassembling for the night, the audience was prepared for the most unique of the serial exercises of the commencement. Noteworthy as the entertainments had been in their combination of artistic pleasure with educative advantages, the originality of three delightful days culminated in this striking display. Moreover, as the Grecian Athena was seated on a throne, around which had been summoned the seniors, whose task the goddess announced to them was that each one should recite the noblest deed performed by a woman for the welfare of the human race. The courses of study in history and literature, under the instruction of Miss Rutherford, the principal, and of Mrs. Lipscomb's department, were here tested. The variety of treatment in the portraitures of historic characters—Joan of Arc, Queen Isabella, Mary Lyon, Florence Nightingale, "Sister Dora," and others—was graphic and thoroughly individualized by each writer; a response in every case most appropriately and eloquently given by Miss Helen Boyd, Xenia, Ohio, post graduate, who crowned each senior with a wreath of flowers emblematic of the character represented. The concluding essay, by Miss Blanche Lipscomb, who gave the deed of Mary of Bethamy as the highest one ever performed by a woman, was pronounced by Miss Boyd to be entitled to special honor, and to the essayist was accorded the distinction of a seat on the footstool of Athena.

Miss Mattie Haygood, first honor graduate, delivered a beautiful and touching valedictory. Mr. P. A. Stovall followed with a graceful and well-timed address, awarding the gold medals from the committee of judges to Miss Leila Barr for elocution in primary class, and to Miss Annie Williams Smith, Albany, Ga., in elocution, advanced class. Major Lamar Cobb conferred the degrees on the sixteen members of the graduating class.

So ended this festival of culture and grace. In refinement and intelligence of sympathetic and appreciative audience; in the diversity of the efforts made to bring into unity pleasure of an exalted kind with a due recognition of the higher worth of a commencement; in the equably sustained interest on the plateau of an elevated table-land; and as the exponent of genuine scholarship in the students of the Lucy Cobb, I recall nothing in the literary festivals of this institution more worthy of commendation than these four days, on which, moderation as the charm of wisdom, and symmetry as the charm of loveliness, were so finely interblended.

We arrived at this delightful country residence just about dark, and found that the latch-string to every door had been left upon the outside, and that genial and affable gentleman, W. H. Crawford, and his estimable wife awaiting us with that welcome which is characteristic of the southrons.

After devoting a few minutes to thedressingrooms, and exchanging many how-dy-does, we all went out into the large grove just in front of the house, which was beautifully illuminated, when strolls were the order of the evening until the large dinner bell summoned us to the large tables, which had been loaded down with all of the rich viands imaginable. Here the inner man was bountifully taken care of, after which we went into the spacious parlors, where dancing and other enjoyments were engaged in until a late hour, when, with many regrets, we started for home, with many praises for the hospitable reception which had been tendered us by host and wife of one of the prettiest homes in the state. The ceremony took place in the Methodist Episcopal church, the decorations were very elegant; an arch of evergreens over either aisle, with gates underneath. The monograms of the bride and groom surmounted the arches. The wedding march was well executed by the accomplished musician, Miss Della Johnson. As the prelude broke upon the vast audience, the ushers, Messrs. B. F. Eady and John T. Warner, proceeded up the aisles and opened the gates, when the attendants, a couple in either aisle, slowly marched in through the gates and passed one another in front of the chancel, took their places around the rail. Lastly, Mr. Frank Lanier, brother of the groom, and Miss Genie Poer, sister of the bride, came down the right aisle, and the bride and the groom down the left, both couples passed into the chancel and faced the audience, when Dr. A. G. Thomas arose and pronounced a beautiful marriage service. The attendants were: Mr. Frank Lanier and Miss Genie Poer, L. W. Sheppard and Miss Lottie Lanier, Phil. Lanier and Miss Frankie Mitcham, Novatus Baker and Miss Fannie Houston, George W. White and Miss Bunnie Trimble, John H. Word, and Miss Nettie Zachry, Frank Lougly and Miss Nora Henley. The attendants and relatives of the bride and groom repaired to the residence of Mrs. Lue Lanier, mother of the groom, where an elegant repast awaited them. Many and rich were the presents received by the happy couple. Bride and groom left this morning on 10.27 train for Hale Springs to spend a happy two weeks.

PICKETT'S MEN

Fraternizing With the Men Met at Gettysburg.

AN EXCHANGE OF DECORAT

The Hostile Forces Resting Peacefully—Scene of the Old Battle—The Incidents of the Day Told.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., July 3.—Very little sleep visited the eyes of the people of G[illegible] burg last night than on the night of J[illegible] 1863. This morning dawned clear and b[illegible] ful, a perfect counterpart of the mem[illegible] day is commemorates. In place of c[illegible] shots, however, the shrill shrieks of l[illegible] tives broke the Sabbath stillness as exc[illegible] after excursion reinforced the crowds a[illegible] thronging the streets. Brilliant uni[illegible] flashing arms and the mass of people m[illegible] in all directions over the field brings v[illegible] to mind the scenes of the great conflict. [illegible] morning was spent in sight-seeing and [illegible] over the field.

This afternoon, as soon as dinner was [illegible] the veterans collected at their respective [illegible] quarters, and at 1:30 p. m. the proce[illegible] formed at the Eagle hotel, and lead by [illegible] tant Whitrear, and followed by a band, [illegible] up its march toward the place where t[illegible] four years before the Philadelphia ma[illegible] held their position against the famous [illegible] att's division of Longstreet's corps, ar[illegible] northern Virginia. The procession proce[illegible] out Baltimore street to the place where [illegible] metsburg joins it, and which was the [illegible] post of the union sharpshooters during [illegible] fight. Out the Emmetsburg road to Ba[illegible] field avenue, the wearers of blue badges [illegible] white helmets proceeded. Slowly they m[illegible] their way through the dust which cover[illegible] roads. At length they reach "Bl[illegible] Angle." The band strikes [illegible] "Rally Round Flag, Boys," [illegible] the old Philadelphia brigade is once mor[illegible] the ground they defended against such [illegible] welming odds. At a few moments after [illegible] o'clock the Sixty-ninth marched to the [illegible] erected for the purpose, and there the as[illegible] blage was called to order by Colonel O'Ba[illegible] who introduced Adjutant A. W. McDerm[illegible] who read a list of the killed and mor[illegible] wounded of the sixty-ninth regiment. He [illegible] presented General Joshua T. Owen, who [illegible] livered the oration. During his speech [illegible] general said he hardly knew what to say to [illegible] men who twenty-four years ago today eme[illegible] from the woods 1,500 yards away and made [illegible] terrible assault on the union line. "Let t[illegible] place their monument where they wish." [illegible] continued:

"Armisted and several others pierced our [illegible] and here, within a few feet of this spot, he [illegible] wounded unto death. The renowned Phila[illegible] of Alexander would not have dared to m[illegible] the charge Pickett's made." In closing [illegible] called for three cheers for Pickett's div[illegible] as a proof of their friendship. They [illegible] given with a will, as were three cheers [illegible] General Owens.

Colonel Reily then presented the monum[illegible] to the care and keeping of the Battle[illegible] Memorial association. It was received in[illegible] name by Colonel J. B. Bachelder.

Before the ceremonies began, Mrs. Pick[illegible] escorted by General Burns, took her [illegible] on the platform, and the crowd [illegible] once cheered her. Now Adjutant Ge[illegible] McDermott stepped forward and presen[illegible] her with a beautiful floral cross, which ha[illegible] been given the brigade by Mrs. Reed, of Philadelphia, and which they now wished to present to her. She arose and merely bowed he[illegible] thanks. This finished the ceremonies of [illegible] Sixty-ninth, and now the Seventy-first [illegible] the platform, and Captain Stockton introdu[illegible] General Burns, who succeeded General Ba[illegible] in command, as orator. The general sp[illegible] for some time, but finally took out his pa[illegible] and read.

When he finished General Baldy Smith [illegible] presented, and spoke for a few minutes. [illegible] monument was presented by General Wis[illegible] and was accepted in the name of the asso[illegible] tion by Colonel John M. Vandersli[illegible] Philadelphia.

Colonel Q. Penn Smith then, in a very [illegible] teresting speech, turned over to the memo[illegible] association the tablet of Cushing's batte[illegible] which was also received by Colonel W[illegible] Smalley.

Perhaps the most interesting incident of t[illegible] whole dedication was the presentation by C[illegible] onel Cowan to the Pickett division of the [illegible] sociation of the sword which he took dur[illegible] Pickett's famous charge. It is about th[illegible] feet long. The handle is of mother of pe[illegible] and the blade of finely polished steel. T[illegible] way it came into the possession of Colo[illegible] Cowan was this: During the charge a y[illegible] young rebel officer jumped toward the gu[illegible] which he was standing, but was immediat[illegible] shot down, and his sword fell at the co[illegible] nel's feet. He has kept it, but has never be[illegible] able to restore it to the family of the offic[illegible] and he has now given it to the divisi[illegible] order that they may take measures to see t[illegible] it is returned to the proper persons.

Major J. C. Cracker, of Virginia, accepte[illegible] in the name of the Pickett Division associati[illegible] promising to do all that was possible to f[illegible] the family of the officer.

Colonel Cowan then introduced Gene[illegible] Baldy Smith and General Hunt to the asse[illegible] bly, by whom they were received with che[illegible] The party then broke up and returned to to[illegible]

A very funny incident occured this af[illegible] noon. A little fellow wearing a blue ba[illegible] and a Philadelphi brigade helmet, walked [illegible] to a tall man wearing a picket badge and s[illegible] "Say, don't I know you; havn't I seen y[illegible] before?"

"Why, yes, I believe I know you too," [illegible] other answered.

They finally recollected that the little fell[illegible] had taken the big one, who was wounded [illegible] prisoner during the charge, and a few minut[illegible] afterwards they had their picturs taken wi[illegible] clasped hands and standing on the spot wh[illegible] the confederate said he was taken.

This evening it is hard to tell which is t[illegible] brigade and which Pickett's division. O[illegible] man who was supposed to be a Philadelph[illegible] man, came down the street with a confederat[illegible] badge and canteen fastened on one side, and [illegible] blue badge on the other, and a brigade hat s[illegible] sideways on his head.

Tonight some are in reality tenting on th[illegible] old camp ground, on the spot where they sle[illegible] on their arms twenty-four years ago. O[illegible] hundred small and four large hospital ten[illegible] have been up at a clump of trees, and lights [illegible] spirits will probably bunk here tonight and t[illegible] morrow they will go over the field.

The Miners' Strike.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 3.—The mine[illegible] and laborers employed in colliery No. three [illegible] of the Kingston Coal company, to the numb[illegible] of three hundred, struck work yesterday f[illegible] an advance in the price paid for cutting th[illegible] gangways and air courses, and against th[illegible] new rule requiring laborers to load six cars fo[illegible] a day's work, instead of five as heretofore.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell at Home.

AUGUSTA, Ga., July 3.—[Special.]—Mr. an[illegible] Mrs. Clark Howell returned from Europe to[illegible] night.

They will spend a few days with the famil[illegible] of Mrs. Howell before going to Atlanta.

He is Coming to Atlanta.

SAVANNAH, Ga., July 3.—[Special.]—W. W[illegible] David, signal observer here, will leave in th[illegible] morning for Atlanta, where he has been or[illegible] dered to relieve the assistant observer. M[illegible] David has been here two years and a half, an[illegible] has made an excellent record.

Deaths from Yellow Fever.

KEY WEST, Fla., July 3.—There have bee[illegible] five new cases of fever since yesterday, but n[illegible] deaths. The record stands now: Total cas[illegible] to date 63; deaths 21; discharged, cured, 1[illegible] sick now, 30.
